

MORE POWER TURNED ON DIVORCE MILL MACHINERY

There was too much mother-in-law in the life of Leah G. Baty, married to Leslie M. Baty, at Portland, on July 21, 1914, and Tuesday she filed a divorce complaint in Judge Campbell's court, charging cruelty. Mr. Baty did not discourage her mother's habit of upbraiding Mrs. Baty, she charges, and the mother-in-law habitually called her vile names and accused her wrongfully, the complaint states. Once Mr. Baty emptied his wife's trunk, refused her the use of it and ordered her from the house, Mrs. Baty asks for $30 a month alimony and the custody of a minor son.

Lulu Plettenberg charges Irving Plettenberg, to whom she was married in Oregon City on June 14, 1912, with desertion dating from April 1, 1915, in a divorce complaint filed Tuesday. She asks custody of two minor children.

Edith A. Sheldon, married to Kirk Sheldon at Portland on December 3, 1910, Tuesday morning filed a suit for divorce, charging the husband with desertion on November 15, 1914. Sheldon has not supported his wife since that time, she claims. She asks for the restoration of her maiden name, Edith A. Bishop.

In a divorce complaint filed Tuesday morning by Winnie Hanson against Olaf Hanson, to whom she was married at Portland on March 14, 1911, Mrs. Hanson charges her husband with cruelty. He is charged with having demanded so many times that she leave him that she did so on November 28 of this year. Mrs. Hanson asks for the custody of a 5-year-old daughter and $15 a month for the child's support.

Eleventh hour divorce court business brought into fame the age-old town of Jacksonville, Ore., the village of a one-time great glory, where Grace Driscoll, married there to Daniel F. Driscoll on February 3, 1895, filed suit for divorce. The complaint, submitted to the court yesterday, charges desertion, dating from February, 1911.

Charles M. Kolb told his wife, Fay Kolb, to leave their home so many times that on August 1, last, she took him at his word and went back to the home of her parents. Mrs. Kolb charges cruelty in the divorce complaint she filed yesterday. They were married in Marion county on June 10, 1914.

Judge Campbell Tuesday signed a decree separating Eva and J. A. Pattison, and ordered Mr. Pattison to pay his wife and three children $100 a month from his income, said to be $600 a month. A demurrer to the complaint filed some time ago by James E. Girt was denied to Grace E. Girt by Judge Campbell. The latter is given five days in which to plead further.

On Saturday a divorce decree separating W. A. and Prudence Davidson and restoring to Mrs. Davidson her maiden name, Prudence Lance, was signed and during the past week decrees were signed separating Christian and Almira D. Stebken, Henry and Viola Maude Peters, Josephine and Martin L. Mathers, Minnie and Oscar C. Tracy, and Bertha and William Fisher. In the Stebken case neither party is permitted to claim any interest in the property of the other; Mrs. Mathers is given custody of two children, and Mrs. Fisher has restored her maiden name, Bertha Powell. Mrs. Sanberg will be known hereafter as Maxine Walker, according to the judge's order.

FIGHT ON BRIDGE CAUSES ARRESTS

of the local Brotherhood of Paper Makers, and prominent in strike activities, by City Recorder John W. Leder. The warrant was sworn out by Walter Rowan, employed by the Hawley mills, and charged Ott with assault and battery, said to have occurred Friday night. The warrant was served upon Ott Monday by Chief of Police Henry Cooke. Ott is the man whose reinstatement was demanded by a strike of Crown-Willamette employees here last spring after he had been discharged by the company. The case was dismissed on Wednesday because Rowan failed to appear to prosecute.

Frank Yarc, a striker, was arrested Saturday evening and jailed on a disorderly conduct charge. State police ordered him to move on when he was picketing the Oregon City end of the suspension bridge. His arrest followed his refusal to obey the command, the police say.

Charges against S. A. Richards, prominent in local union affairs, involving him for the use of improper language have been dismissed at the request of the complaining witness, Victor Concorro.

The Thanksgiving spirit extended to the "Hotel de Swan" Thursday, and approximately 600 employees of the Crown-Willamette Paper company forgot the rules of food conservation for an hour in the face of a splendid holiday dinner. There was sufficient food even for a flock of sea gulls that came this way. The menu included the usual Thanksgiving viands from oyster soup to nuts, embracing turkey in great supply, and pumpkin pie in equally large helpings.

PRESIDENT ASKS WAR ON AUSTRIA

The definition of war aims and peace terms, the most explicit ever voiced by the head of any great warring powers, was accepted as the most significant, because, since his reply to the pope's peace note, the president has come to be regarded more and more as a spokesman for all the nations fighting Germany.

Approval of President Wilson's declaration of war on Austria-Hungary was voiced by practically every member of congress who commented upon it. "It was the greatest address the president has ever delivered," declared George E. Chamberlain, democrat of Oregon and chairman of the senate military affairs committee.

Representative McArthur, commenting on the president's address, said: "I heartily approve a declaration of war on Austria, and will vote for it." Asked whether he favored a declaration of war at the same time against Turkey and Bulgaria, McArthur said he would not comment on this phase at this time.

Mr. Hawley favors the immediate declaration of war on Austria, as our forces at any time are liable to be brought into action against the Austrian army. Sooner or later, he believes, we will be compelled to declare war against Turkey and Bulgaria, but as to the time for that step he proposes to follow the lead of the president. He sees no objection, however, to declaring war on these allies of Germany now.

Representative Sinnott said: "I favor declaring war against Austria-Hungary without delay, and unless the president has some good reason which he has not disclosed, I believe it would be wise at the same time to declare war against Turkey and Bulgaria. Turkey and Bulgaria are tools of Germany quite as much as Austria; their military operations are directed from Berlin. Turkey and Bulgaria have made common cause with Germany and their citizens in this country should be dealt with as alien enemies, just as German subjects are regarded and treated."

HAL SWAFFORD WRITES FINE LETTER FROM FRONT of a copy here and I have just finished reading it. It certainly gives one an idea of just what our job here is.

In the move we just made to our new camp in order to accommodate the supply department, I happened to get in a hut where nearly all the Oregon City boys live. In this one hunt we now have Bill Folger, Harry Smith, Earl Hutchinson, Alfred Bigger, Carl Martin, "Brigadier" Hancock and myself. You knew, didn't you, that Blake Bowland was now a corporal? Elbert Charman, Roy Stafford, Bill Strohmeyer, Ben Holladay and Walter Dunger are in the hut next to mine. Did I ever tell you how these huts are made? They are built in sections away off somewhere and put together with bolts. They are very lightly constructed and are covered with paper that makes an excellent sieve to strain the rain so that when you wake up in the night with a stream of water hitting you square in the face you can know it is the best quality of French rain. But little things like that are the least of our troubles. We have gotten over minding little things like that long ago.

The "Top" is very friendly with me and I certainly take off my hat to him. He is a real wonder at handling men. He nearly always manages to settle a controversy in a real diplomatic way. As I have often said "F" company stands high with everybody. Fellows say, "Gee, I wish I could eat with you fellows, you have lots better grub than we do." Modesty forbids me to say anything concerning the supply department. I try to be a square shooter but at that I'd hate to hear all the blankety blanks I'm called. You know, it is impossible to please 184 men all at the same time and then there are the chronic crabs who are never satisfied. And the fellow who is always hanging around expecting you to issue him something more or a little better than the rest. One day everything was going rotten with everybody and Red Anderson, (do you remember him? he went to American Lake the same morning I did; he wore tennis shoes), said "There are just two things in this world that disgust me and the army is both of them." And we all feel that way at times. Well, I guess no one will be sorry when we can all come home. And I don't think any one will be more tickled than your little brother. I often think of your advice about being cheerful when things go wrong and I try to keep that in mind. It's pretty hard at times, but I have learned there is nothing more disgusting than a perpetual crab. Tell Hub Vernet we've got a regular hard boiled outfit now. Tell anyone else you happen to see hello. I just got your note enclosing the Elks card. Thanks ever so much.

SGT. H. A. SWAFFORD. RAT UP HIS TROUSERS LEG

Ohio Groceryman Experiences Exciting Contest With Rotten Inclined to Be Too Familiar.

One of those unfortunate things which it would have been interesting to see, as long as it had to happen anyway, mused the Ohio State Journal, is reported by the Gallipolis Journal, which relates in its graphic and gripping way what recently happened to Mr. Carlton Stone, described by the Journal, which, of course, knows him well, as the handsome and debonaire grocer of Gallipolis.

Mr. Stone, it seems, under stress of great and repeated provocation, had been led to say some rather sharp things concerning the general character and the unpleasant habits of the huge rats which infest his emporium, and one of their number, a grumpy, wiry fellow, at last was unanimously selected to essay reprisals. This our reader did by lurking and prowling about, awaiting his opportunity, and when in his best judgment it had come, by making a sudden sortie and surprising our unconscious grocer by darting with marvelous celerity up Mr. Stone's elongated but shapely limb, to employ the Journal's refined but clear language.

The verve and dash of the wholly unexpected attack all but robbed our hero of his usual calm presence of mind for the moment, but as the assaulting party passed the knee sector, Mr. Stone, realizing that something must be done, and done quickly, recovered his customary poise, formulated his plan of attack and soon was engaged in counter-movements combining high kicking, frantic slapping and complete removal of trousers with the versatility, a vigor, a determination and a change of pace that beggar all description.

Suffice it to say that the misguided rat in scarcely more than a trice was hors de combat, as we say in Ohio, while Mr. Stone was soon the center of an admiring throng, the observed of all eyes, peering and panting, but victorious. "I have striven to be a part," gasped he in his droll way, "of our special representative reached the scene of the encounter, 'to make the world safe for democracy.'"

Expert U-Boat Trapper.

There is a Gordon Campbell who is the "mystery man" of the British navy. He has been given the D. S. O. and the V. C. and now he has five silver bars on his ribbons. But not a word of explanation has ever appeared in the official gazette. His name and his new honors have been printed, and that is all, writes a correspondent.

The explanation is that he is engaged in U-boat trapping. The stories told of his exploits are intensely interesting and amusing, but must not be repeated as yet. In a general way it may be said that he is almost absurdly without fear, and that the devices by which he catches the Hun are immensely clever.

"He came in the other day from a cruise," said a navy man. "One-third of his crew was on strike. They said they would never put to sea again with such an absolute madman."

Conservation of Wool.

The president's national committee of defense has been busily sending out announcements to the wholesale dressmakers. They tell the dire tale that wool must be saved by this country, and they make the pertinent suggestion that the coming gowns shall not be made all of wool, notes the New York Times. There is a substitute for wool, woven of what is called "remade wool" (they are using some of this in the army), and, then, there is our life-long friend, the cotton and wool mixture—not considered very elegant in the past. There is no telling what will be the result of all this looking forward, but the fact remains that wool is going up and up and that something must be done, not alone for the sake of the government, but for the sake of poor, suffering pocket-books. We may yet be dressing in paper and spinning wool as old-fashioned and out of date.

Naval Supremacy.

Sir Cyprian Bridge has said one of the functions of a fleet is the defense of commerce. There is no more important function for a fleet than this, writes John Hays Hammond, Jr., in the Atlantic Monthly. A nation may be subjugated by direct invasion, or it may be isolated from the world by blockade. If the blockade be sufficiently long and effectively maintained, it will ruin the nation as effectually as direct invasion. Thus, in the maintenance of a nation's merchant marine on the high seas, its navy exercises one of its most vital functions. There can, therefore, be no naval supremacy for a nation unless its commerce is assured of immunity from considerable losses through the attack of its enemy.

No Patronizing.

"What coal man do you patronize?" "I don't patronize any," replied Miss Cayenne. "If a coal man observed any signs of a patronizing attitude he might take offense."

MOURN DEAD CHIEF

Russian Peasants Fall on Knees Before Urn of Ashes.

Member of American Commission to New Empire Explains Keys to Their Political Play.

"The keys to the Russian political play are, after all, simple, and to be found in simple events," says Charles Edward Russell, who was sent by President Wilson with the American commission to new Russia. Here is one such simple event as he gives it in Hearst's Magazine:

"There is a place on the Trans-Siberian railroad called Passing Point No. 37, a brown little speck on the illimitable emptiness of the Siberian plains. On the 23d of May there came marching up to it a procession of farmers—about forty of them, I think—carrying red flags. They tramped solemnly along what in Siberia, by a violence of speech, is called a road, and is, in fact, not otherwise than a trail of ruts in black gumbo mud.

"A passenger train was coming from the east, from Vladivostok. At Passing Point No. 37 it took the sidetrack to wait for the train it was to meet. It was a procession of the peasants were seen to kneel up in front of the baggage car, to fall on their knees there, to lift their hands in attitudes of prayer, the while they uttered strange, wailing cries and many wept.

"What were they crying about? They had learned that in that baggage car were the ashes of a Russian revolutionist, an old-time hero of the long, long struggle. He had been condemned by the czar to one of the worst prisons in coldest Siberia; he had managed to escape and in the end to get to America. There he died, and his body was cremated. Now his ashes in a draped memorial urn were being carried in state back to that free Russia he had dreamed of and suffered for. But note:

"Of the peasants that fell on their knees before that handful of dust that day, about one-half could not read. All of them, you might think, lived in a region farther from the world and its affairs than is Cape Nome from the Bering Sea. Yet all of them knew well enough the name of this dead hero and all his deeds, and instinctively all knelt before his ashes that they might testify at once their reverence for him and the fervor of their own revolutionary faith.

"But what did that procession mean, wandering red-flagged along the bleak, windswept hillsides? It meant that the peasants were making a 'demonstration.' Demonstration about what? Why, if you will believe me, against the Austrian government's sentence of death against Frederick Adler, slayer of the Austrian prime minister.

"And there you are: that is Russia. Also, you may see in this incident how deep in the heart of every peasant and toiler are the least of the rudiments of the revolution's creed."

Magnitude in Modern War.

The magnitude of the war, as a whole, is repeated in every phase of its activity, and in no way more so than in its instruments of war. As we have more than once remarked, says the Scientific American, it has been necessary to multiply our units of measurement by from 10 to 100. Weapons which were thought massive and powerful in 1914 are puny in 1917. Thus, heavy artillery, whose weight it took down to fixed fortification, is now moving merrily over the field of battle. Where, formerly, we talked in millions, now we talk freely in billions. Before the war 25 to 30 knots was battle-cruiser speed—today we have such ships of from 150,000 to 200,000 horse power steaming at 35 to 40 knots. A notable instance of this growth is in the field of aviation, where the British have airplanes of 600 horse power and the Italians have gone up to 1,000. And the end is not yet.

Five-Year-Old Seal Skins.

A sufficient number of skins of five-year-old fur seals will be taken on the Pribilof Islands, Alaska, to enable the United States bureau of fisheries to determine fully how they will be received by the trade and the best uses to which such skins may be put, says the Scientific American.

These skins have about twice the area of the skins from an average three-year-old seal, and are regarded by experts as fully equal in quality to the average skin of the younger seals that have heretofore made up the quota for the natives' use.

Two expert seal skimmers from Newfoundland and two sealskin specialists from the St. Louis concern will proceed to the Pribilof Islands for the purpose of assisting the agents and instructing the natives in taking and preparing sealskins.

Japanese Playing Golf.

Some of the new millionaires of Japan have taken up golf, which they play on links maintained in the most approved style. They are building country houses like castles of old in splendor. They are following many American and European ways, and yet, lavishly as they are scattering large incomes in air, they are wonderfully influenced by subtle refinements inherited from their ancestors. For the pleasures of the table they care little. Mostly the extravagance of the newly rich of Japan finds vent in endowing colleges, assembling treasures of literature and art, and ministering to those senses and desires through which men nourish the soul.

IT CAN'T BE DONE

Would Marry a Soldier Boy, But All Conspire to Thwart Hope

Leave it to such an institution as a school board to be as hard-hearted as a Sphinx and to successfully put a crimp into the romantic ambitions of a defenseless young school ma'am. That's just what has happened with one longing and loving lassie who propounds knowledge to sundry youth in the county that harbors the village of Portland.

Yesterday County Clerk Iva Harrington received from Multnomah county a letter that carried between the lines all the heart throbs of patriotism that its writer could inject. "I want to marry a soldier boy," the note said. "But there is an objection in Multnomah county to employing married women as teachers. Tell me, please, if I can get a marriage license in your office next Saturday and not have it get in the newspapers." If the story got into the papers the stuff was off, as far as the little woman's job was concerned, the letter indicated.

Miss Harrington, who submits to more banter from a gang of crabbed newspapermen than any other official in seven states, could not promise to keep the teacher's secret. "The records are public," Miss Harrington was forced to say, "and this office, therefore, has no secrets."

With the school board, the county clerk and a pack of avaricious newspaper men conspiring against her, it is a safe bet that the dainty pedagogue will not be married to her soldier boy in Clackamas county.

MRS. PALMER WANTS $10,000

Says C. F. Jackson Drove Machine into Rear of Her Buggy

Catherine Palmer yesterday filed suit for damages in the sum of $10,000 against C. F. Jackson. The complaint charges Jackson with negligently and carelessly running into the rear of Mrs. Palmer's buggy with his automobile. The collision threw Mrs. Palmer out of the rig and she suffered three broken ribs, a badly bruised hip and a series of other injuries. She asks $10,000 as damages and $125 as doctor fees. Both Mrs. Palmer and Mr. Jackson are residents of the Molalla country. The accident resulting in the suit occurred last month. Mrs. Palmer claims to have been driving toward her home when the Jackson machine struck the rear of her buggy.

Mrs. Henry Larsen, 905 "John Adams St., Oregon City, says: "I was subject to backache for several years. It used to be so bad I couldn't rest well day or night. When I was on my feet a great deal my back ached like a toothache. Nights I couldn't get to sleep on account of the constant pain over my kidneys. My kidneys also acted too freely. I felt all played out and had no ambition to do anything. The least exertion made me tired and nervous. Since I have been taking Doan's Kidney Pills my back feels stronger and my kidneys act more regularly. Doan's have proven beneficial in every way."

FATTENING TURKEYS IN FALL

Ration Consisting of Wheat Middlings, Cornmeal and Beef Scrap Is Highly Recommended.

Although the finishing of turkeys for market is sometimes quite difficult, it is nevertheless a profitable business. W. E. Shetron, a leading poultryman, I have had best results by using the following fattening ration: Six pounds cornmeal, two wheat middlings and two beef scrap. This is mixed with sour milk and fed for the two weeks just previous to market. The turkeys are not closely confined, but are given only a small run during this period. My young turkeys are fed plenty of green food and sour skimmed milk. As they grow I gradually increase the feed and change from cracked to whole grains. After six weeks a good mixture is two pounds cornmeal, two wheat bran, one beef scrap and one pint charcoal.

SICK WOMAN HAD CRYING SPELLS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Enhaut, Pa.—"I was all run down and weak inwardly. I had female troubles and nervous feelings and my head bothered me. I would often have crying spells and feel as if I was not safe. If I heard anyone coming I would run and lock the door so they would not see me. I tried several doctors and they did not help me so I said to myself 'I guess I will have to die as there is no help for me.' She got me one of your little bottles. I stopped the doctor's medicine and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It soon made a change in me and now I am strong and do all my work."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS BAUGHMAN, Box 86, Enhaut, Pa.

All Made for Something

A soldier friend of G. R. H. Miller has sent to him from Seattle the following timely verse: Some people were made to be soldiers, The Irish were made to be cops, Sour kraut was made for the Germans, And spaghetti was made for the Jews.
