Mr. Empey's Experiences During His Seventeen Months in the First Line Trenches of the British Army in France

(Copyright, 1917, by The McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

We were sitting on a firestep in the front line trench. It was bright and sunny and we were bubbling over with good humor. There were two reasons for this: First—our battalion was to be relieved at nine that night and we were going back for a two weeks' rest. Second—it was spring. We could smell it in the air. Even the wind blowing from the German trenches in our direction had a sweet and "springy" smell.

About thirty yards down a communication trench to the left was an orchard. The trees were scarred from bullets and fragments of shell; but even these battered trunks could not resist the feel of spring, because here and there on the twigs and branches could be seen bursting buds. Flitting around were numerous birds, chirping, and sometimes wrangling among themselves.

To me it seemed odd that birds could accustom themselves to war. Occasionally a German shell, or perhaps one of ours, would go screaming over the orchard. The birds did not seem to mind the noise—just carried on with their nest-building.

In our company was an American named Alexander Stewart. Naturally he and I were very chummy.

Stewart and I were the chief "amusement promoters" in the company. The Tommies constantly looking to us for some new diversion.

In the English army a Tommy seems to have the idea that an American's chief vocation in the United States is to invent, and to keep on inventing. Of course, Stewart and I did not in any way try to dissipate this idea; in fact, we encouraged it, and took great pride in being looked up to in this way; but, believe me, it kept us hustling to keep the Tommies amused.

It was getting too warm for soccer football, and we knew as soon as we got into rest billets that the issue would be put right up to us: "How are you going to amuse us while behind the lines?"

We were Americans, and red-blooded; spring was in the air, and our thoughts turned to what every American boy is thinking of upon the arrival of spring—baseball.

I turned my eyes to the muddy parapets (rear wall of the trench) and fixed my gaze on a fragment of German shell embedded in the mud. Pretty soon this fragment seemed to change into a baseball player, with mask, protector and catcher's mitt. He was crouching behind the home plate and signaling to the pitcher. Just then Stewart said: "Say, Emp, I wonder if we could teach the Tommies how to play baseball?"

I immediately turned in his direction. He was also staring at that fragment of shell.

I answered: "Did you ever try to teach a Chinaman how to speak French?"

He got it right away and a dejected look spread over his countenance, and he let out a long-drawn sigh.

A Tommy sitting on my right tutted in with: "Did you see byesball, Yank? Why, I saw a gyne in London, and it's absurdly easy to ply, but I can't see I fancy h't."

With a look of disgust Stewart turned to me and said: "I guess you're right, Emp. It would be easier to teach the Chinaman French."

That night we were in and went behind the lines.

The next afternoon, after parade, we were sitting in an orchard drinking tea. About a month before, Stewart and I had taught the Tommies how to pitch horseshoes. There was great rivalry among the different squads, each squad having a team.

Just then Corporal Watkins came over to us and asked: "Where are the 'orse shoes? I can't find 'em."

Another Tommy answered: "Strafe me pink, where are your h'eyes? Cawn't you bloom'n' well see the h'of-ficers usin' 'em be'ind that billet over there? Blime me, they're always 'n'gummin' the gyne."

Sure enough, the officers were using our horseshoes.

Stewart, with a look of depression on his face, turned to me and said: "Well, here goes, Emp. Steve Brodie took a chance, so I might be able to get away with this."

Then, turning to the Tommies, he said: "Did any of you blokes ever hear of John McGraw?"

Three of the Tommies answered, "Yes."

A sunny smile and a look of hope flitted across Stewart's face, and he breathlessly asked, "Who is he?" The three started to answer at once, but Stewart, majestically extending his hand, palm forward, said, "Get in line, one at a time. Now, Perkins, who is John McGraw?"

Perkins answered: "Why, 'e's a

According to Stewart's look, that Tommy should have immediately dropped dead.

Turning to the next, he said, "Curly, for the love o' Mike, who is he?"

Curly, with a knowing look, answered, "E runs the King's Arms public 'ouse, down Rye lane."

With a piteous look, Stewart glanced my way and I jerked my thumb in the direction of the other Tommy, who seemed to be bursting with suppressed eagerness. Stewart, looking at him, ejaculated, "Spit it out before you choke."

This fellow, with a superior air, turned in the direction of the two dejected Tommies, and answered, "John McGraw, why everybody knows 'im; 'e was the fellow in the London Scottish who elicited 'crucifixion' for stealing the run issue at 'Wipers.' 'E was a hind, not 'arf 'e weren't."

A hissing noise issued from Stewart's lips, and he seemed to collapse like a punctured toy balloon. After a few seconds he straightened up and a look of determination came into his eyes.

Addressing the Tommies, he exploded: "Ye'n blokes are enough to make Billy Sunday take to drink. Now, listen here, and let it sink in deep. John McGraw is the manager of the New York Giants. He is a baseball player; get it? A baseball player. A guy what manages a baseball team. And any fellows who can't make good on his team, or in the bush leagues, he sends 'em a cricket bat with their name inscribed on it and pays their passage to England. Get me?"

Several Tommies took exception to this, and said that they had followed cricket all their lives, but had never heard of any American cricketers being sent over by a Mr. McGraw. At this I exploded, and Stewart went up in the air. Standing up and turning to the bunch under the trees, pointing his finger in their direction, he let out:

"Now listen, this is good. I'm going to send down to the ordnance corps and get a dozen gimlets and some funnels. With these gimlets I'm going to bore holes in your 'nappers,' and using the funnel I'm going to pour into these gapers of yours a little brains. Then, after you've acquired gray matter, I'm going to teach you the great American game of baseball; and then when through teaching you, I'm going to retire to the Old Soldiers' home as physically and mentally unfit, because I know the job will put me there."

The Tommies did not take exception to his pointed remarks about their lack of brains. They overlooked this because they were very eager to learn how to play baseball.

A chorus of, "Go to h't, Yank, that's what we want; something new out 'ere in this bloody mess of mud and 'ooties."

Stewart said that we would have to talk the matter over, and beckoning to me, went in the direction of the billet. I followed. He then outlined his scheme.

We were to form two baseball classes, Stewart in charge of one, I the other. On the plaster of the billet we carefully scratched out a baseball diamond, and then called the Tommies in. They sat around like little children in a school, eagerly intent. For two hours we explained the game to them. When we got through they all knew how to play baseball—on paper. We dismissed them, telling them another class would be held the following afternoon. That night, Stewart and I, around the stump of a candle, went into details for organizing two teams. Everything appeared rosy, and we were highly jubilant. A Tommy eased over in our direction and innocently asked:

"I see, Yank, isn't it necessary to 'ave byesballs and clubs? We cawn't very well ply without 'em."

This was a bombshell to us. In our eagerness and excitement we had quite forgotten that bats, balls and gloves were necessary. I thought Stewart was going to burst. Letting out a "Well, I'll be blowed!" which nearly blew the candle out, he turned a silly look in my direction, and I looked just as cheap.

At last the Tommies had stumped us, and we could see our reputation fading into nothing. A dead silence reigned for over five minutes. Then Stewart started manly to open his haversack. I thought he had suddenly gone crazy. I reached my hand in the direction of my bayonet, fearing that he was looking for a Mills' bomb. When he drew his hand out, hanging to his fist was a writing pad. I let go of my bayonet. Borrowing a pencil from me (Stewart was always borrowing), he started writing. I thought perhaps he was going to commit suicide and was writing a farewell letter home, and asked him what was up. He whispered to me:

"Emp, we're two bloody fools not to have thought of this long ago. One of us got to do it to write home to all of the New York papers, asking the readers to send out baseball stuff to us, and it will only be a matter of a few weeks when we will have enough to equip two teams."

I offered to write the letter, and with Stewart heading over me, I angely wrote an appeal to the readers of a New York newspaper, and turned the letter over to the mail orderly.

We then explained to the Tommies that equipment was necessary and that we had written home, but while waiting for the baseball stuff to arrive we would carry on with our instruction classes.

The next day Stewart and I made a woolen baseball out of an old puttee, fixed up a temporary diamond, and showed the Tommies the general run of the game. Their antics were awful. If we had used a regular baseball I don't think there would have been a Tommy in the squad without a black eye. Did you ever watch a girl trying to catch a ball? Well, the girl's team alongside of some of these Tommies would have looked like the winner in our world's series. It was hard work keeping their interest up.

Two weeks later we went up into the front line; then came back again for another rest. The interest in baseball was dying out and we were at our wit's end. Time passed, and we figured out that we ought to be hearing from our appeal, but nothing came. Then, once again we went into the front line trench.
