CHAPTER XXII.

The Rainbow's End.

The journey to the east was made by easy stages and Esteban stood it fairly well. Jacket, of course, went along. Upon the announcement of O'Reilly's intended departure for the States he had promptly abandoned Cuba to her fate. He foreswore her utterly and declared himself a loyal American citizen.

Relying upon the best information obtainable at Cubitas, O'Reilly had counted upon securing a sailboat from a certain fisherman whose sympathies were known to be loyal, but in this he was disappointed. The party arrived at its destination, a tiny clearing on an unfrequented part of the north shore, only to find it deserted and already grown to weeds. The house was empty, the boats were gone—all but one old hulk, too rotten to warrant moving, which lay high up on the sand, its planks worn-out, its seams wide spread by the sun.

O'Reilly was in a quandary. He gravely doubted Esteban's ability to stand the rough return journey, and when he spoke to Norine of turning back she was panic-stricken at the suggestion.

"No, no!" she cried, anxiously. "We must get him away. His heart is set on going through and it would kill him to go back."

"Then I guess we'll have to go through," he smiled.

For the first time in their acquaintance Norine lost control of herself.

"Promise that you won't go back," she implored him.

"Very well, if you'll consent to risk this miserable tub we found on the beach."

"It's risk anything—a raft, even. Is there an even chance of our getting across?"

"Perhaps. It all depends upon the weather."

When morning came O'Reilly made a closer examination of the abandoned boat. The result was not encouraging, but he determined to make use of it, and the crazy craft was launched. It was necessary to handle her gingerly, and when she took the water she leaked abominably. But during the night she swelled and in the morning it was possible to bail her out.

From the point of leaving it was perhaps five miles across the sound to the fringe of keys which in this neighborhood bordered the old Bahama channel with its unplumbed depths of blue water. Here it was calm, so the run was soon made.

When the coastline of Cuba had become a blur astern Rosa crept back and seated herself beside her husband.

"How much I love you," she whispered.

"But I never can tell you, for we are never alone. Was there ever such a courtship, such a marriage, and such a wedding journey as ours?"

It proved to be a long, long night, for the boat, though roomy, was uncomfortable. Daylight brought an increased breeze which heeled the boat further. Fortunately the haze was not thick enough to wholly obscure the sun and so O'Reilly was enabled to hold his course. But he did not like the look of things. In time there came a spitting drizzle which completely hid the sun and left no indication of the course except the direction whence drove the rain.

No one spoke now. Even Esteban lay silent, shivering miserably upon his sudden bed. Rosa finally straightened her aching back and smiled at her husband.

"Are we going down?" she asked.

"Oh no! This is merely a squall," he told her, with an assumption of confidence he was far from feeling.

Deliverance came suddenly, and from the least-expected quarter. Out of the mist to starboard there materialized a shape, a schooner driving ahead of the wind. The refugees described her simultaneously and stood ankle deep in the wash, waving their hats and their calabashes, and shouting crazily until she saw them and fetched up.

There was a babble of voices, shouted questions, hysterical answers. Rosa was weeping softly; Norine had lifted Esteban and now clutched him tight, while her tears fell upon his face.

The schooner was a sponger bound for Nassau; its blackbird crew spoke English and they willingly helped the strangers overside, laughing and shouting in a childlike display of excitement. Soon there was hot food and coffee, dry beds and blankets for those who needed them.

Johnnie tucked his bride snugly into one of the hard berths, then stooped and kissed her. Rosa's teeth were chattering, but she smiled happily.

"God's hand directed us," she said. "One only needs to pray long enough and strong enough and he will hear."

It was a month later. Quaint old Nassau lay dozing under an afternoon sun. Up from the beach came O'Reilly and his youthful alter ego, Jacket. They were clad in clean white clothes; a month of rest had done them good. Jacket was no longer wizened; he was plump and sleek and as full of mischief as a colt, while O'Reilly's leanness had disappeared and he filled his garments as a man should.

They turned in through a picket gate and up a walk. At the end stood a cottage with wide porches hidden beneath jasmine and honeysuckle and morning-glory vines.

"Look, Rosa!" Jacket lifted the heavy string of fish. "We had stupendous luck." But Rosa was in her husband's arms and neither she nor O'Reilly had eyes for anything but each other.

Rosa had vastly changed. She was clad in a charming little muslin dress, there were dimples in her cheeks, she wore a heavy Marchal necklace at her breast. O'Reilly held her off and devoured her with his eyes.

"Sweetheart, you grow fresher and more beautiful every hour," said he.

Rosa danced upon her toes, and tugged at him. "But come quickly and see the surprise we have. I've been wild for your return, so hurry." She led him swiftly up the steps, and there, standing beside a chair, was Esteban Varona. "He dressed himself and walked out here alone. He's well!"

"Esteban! Really—"

The brother nodded decisively. "It's true. I rebelled at last. Tomorrow I'll walk to the gate and the next day we'll go fishing. Here's a letter from Leslie, by the way. There's one bit of news; he says the talk of intervention increases and he may have to return to Cuba as a war correspondent."

"Intervention! That would be fine," Esteban cried.

O'Reilly nodded. "Oh, it's bound to come, and when Uncle Sam takes hold Cuba will be free."

Norine agreed. "I'm sure of it. And then—we'll all go back to our rainbow's end and dig for that pot of gold."

Esteban turned adoring eyes upon the speaker; he took her hand in his. "I've found my rainbow's end," said he.

"And I've found mine," O'Reilly asserted. "I've gained your father's treasure, and more—I've found the prize of all the Indies." With his arm about Rosa he drew her into the house.

Esteban lowered himself into his chair and Norine rested herself upon its arm. He lay back with eyes closed. From the regions at the rear came the voice of Jacket. The boy was in a declamatory mood. He had gathered an audience, as was his daily custom, and was addressing them in English:

"I skilled more'n a dozen Spaniards at Pipo Bravo. It was my day. By rights I should have been made a general, but—"

(THE END.)

MARIETTA

By MILDRED WHITE.

Caro Dalton fretted, because the kind of French poodle she especially desired was not to be found. Caro's whims were so many and varied that it was fortunate—or unfortunate, as the case may be—that her inherited wealth was not taxed in their fulfillment.

She had tired of the luxurious new car, the sailboat and the city apartment; her much-tried guardian was at his wits' end to please. Yet not to please Caro was to be himself miserable. For David Blair, junior law partner and trusted friend of the girl's departed father, had loved Caro with a deep, unselfish love, from the triumphant epoch of her first long dress and "done-up" hair.

She, unconscious perhaps of this love, had led her devoted slave a merry dance from the time of his instituted guardianship. David was given little anxiety concerning the various admirers who flocked to her train. Caro herself dismissed each promptly in turn. Now, it seemed her overwhelming desire was for some pet upon which to lavish her affection.

"A dog," Caro told her guardian, "is a faithful creature, responding unquestionably to one's moods."

"But why," David asked patiently, "must it necessarily be a white dog, and very small?"

"White, because I shall have to keep it bathed and cared for," Caro answered; "small, so that I may hold it in my lap."

The guardian sighed. Caro's explanations were as unsatisfying as the smile which accompanied them was charming.

"Better wish for a dog of that description," he suggested. "For you wish to have—is it not, Caroline?"

There was a saddened note in the guardian's voice.

"Not always," Caro replied; she looked at him quickly with inscrutable eyes.

But as she drove her car that afternoon beyond her accustomed way, a small dog of exactly the kind she desired, came dashing out across a barren field to bark furiously at her intrusion.

Caro stopped the car, but the little animal continued to bark, until at length it paused breathlessly, to listen to her caressing voice.

"Come," coaxed the girl; "you dear little thing—!" And as she sprang down into the road the dog's feathery tail wagged feverently in greeting.

Before her astonished gaze he arose presently, waving his two fore-paws in the air, and executing a solemn dance around her.

"You funny thing," she exclaimed. "You little trick dog!" Before she could forbid the little white creature had leaped into the car, grinning at her in dog fashion from the front seat.

"He's mine," Caro told herself defiantly; "I wished for him." But the guardian failed to rejoice with her, when he learned the discovery.

Though the dog devoted himself jealously to Caro, David Blair insisted upon placing an advertisement in the "Found" column of that evening's paper, and following closely upon its appearance came a pitiful reply.

"The little found dog is my 'Fidget,' came scrawled in a childish fashion. 'He is all I have to love. He acts with me in the circus. Please bring him back to, Marietta.'"

And though there was no further direction or address, David and his rebellious ward drove that evening with Fidget between them to the faraway grounds, where the traveling circus pitched its great tent.

The little dog of the loved Marietta was at once recognized by welcoming waltzers.

"She didn't sleep last night," a painted clown said. "Fidget is all the folks Marietta's got now, you see. Her mother didn't live long after her dad was killed in his famous jump last year. The circus had sort of 'dopted Marietta since. Every one likes to see the kid dance with her dog, tho' it ain't much of an act after all. Marietta," called the clown, "come here, honey." And Marietta came.

A vision of flying golden curls and short ruffled skirts, she flew toward her pet, and had him in her arms. Then tear-filled, the child's blue eyes sought Caro's.

"I'm sorry," she said, "that you can't have Fidget, but—I love him. And I haven't got anything else to love." The Dalton heiress nodded understandingly; her guardian noted in distress that her eyes were also filled with tears.

Suddenly, impulsively, the girl's arms closed tight about the childish form.

"Dear," said Caro, "do you suppose that you could possibly learn to love me? Would you like to come and live in a big, stone house with a garden; would you like to be—my little sister?"

"Caro!" David Blair expostulated, "think seriously what you are offering."

"I do think," the girl answered quietly. The old twinkle came back to her eyes. "Marietta will be more satisfying than Fidget," she said.

And as he stood looking down upon the two, David Blair's face softened into a great tenderness.

"I am afraid, Caro, that I have never known the real you," he said.

And the girl's eyes again raised to his, reflected their radiant light.

MODEST AVOWAL

"Is this the office of the Toadville Clarion?"

"Yes, sir," answered the rubicund old gentleman who was lounging in the doorway with a corn-cob pipe stuck in his mouth.

"And is it the leading paper here?"

"Sir," replied the old gentleman, with an impressive air, "I feel that it is a duty I owe myself and my family to tell of Toadville. Furthermore—"

—there is no other paper here." —Birmingham Age-Herald.

Mob Rule

In the city of Omaha last Sunday a mob of frenzied white people stormed a jail, took a negro and hanged him. In a white heat, they answered the mayor's appeal for submission to law and order by attempting to hang the executive of the city, who was cut down in time to save his life, but who was badly injured. After the death of the negro, the passions of the mob subsided and they dispersed about the time federal troops arrived.

It is difficult for us of the north to pass judgment upon the white people of the south and those living close to the border. The negro had committed an unnamed crime, and his act made the blood of the white people boil. They demanded speedy vengeance and obtained it.

The negro question is one for the south to solve. We may deplore mob violence, and we may prefer the slow-moving processes of the law, but we must recognize the feelings of people who live in communities where their women are in danger from blacks. It may be said the lawless execution of perverted negroes will not put a stop to crimes of immorality. In fact, it has not done so. There is even the question of the sanity of the murderer to be considered, for no sane man, black or white, could do what blacks frequently do in the south.

The time may come when education, coupled with proper surroundings, will put an end to such crimes, but it will not be soon, and when they occur, we may count upon the southerner to accomplish the speedy extermination of the criminal.

LINN JONES RECOVERS AUTOMOBILE STOLEN WHILE IN PORTLAND

Thursday Mr. Jones received word from the sheriff's office in Portland that the car had been found. Mr. Jones left for Portland and drove the machine back to this city yesterday afternoon, none the worse for wear. The car was found near Portland Heights, and the thieves were not apprehended.

Opera Star, Interned in Bohemia, Will Never Sing Again in German

Mme. Emmy Destinn says she will never have to sing in the German tongue again. She had taken out her first citizenship papers in this country and when she went to her Bohemian castle she was practically interned by the Austrians for more than three years. The grand opera star has just returned to America and is going to make a hurry of the job of getting her final citizenship papers.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS INTERCEDE FOR JUGO-SLAVS IN DALMATIA

LONDON, Sept. 26.—Two hundred American marines landed at Trogir (Taur), on the Dalmatian coast, and turned the town over to the Jugo-Slavs after the latter had compelled an Italian detachment to withdraw a news agency dispatch from Copenhagen reported today.

The dispatch said that when a South Slav detachment began an advance on Trogir an American destroyer entered the harbor to compel retirement of the Italians to the armistice line. The inhabitants opened fire on the Italians, who retired hastily, but the Italian commander and an armored car with its crew were captured by the Slavs. In the meantime 200 American marines, with machine guns, were landed in the town and took possession of the prisoners. The town was turned over to the Jugo-Slavs and the Americans re-embarked.

THREE NEGROES ARE KILLED BY MOBS IN MONTGOMERY, ALA.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 30.—John Temple, negro, who last night shot and fatally wounded Policeman John Barbare and who was wounded by the officer, was shot to death in a hospital early today by a small band of white men. He was the third negro to die by lynch law within 12 hours. Miles Phifer and Robert Crook, the latter a discharged soldier, having been shot to death by a mob five miles from the city yesterday.

Still another negro, Bird Astor, who was with Temple when Barbare was shot, is being sought by the posse.

Phifer and Crook, charged with the commission of crimes against white women, were taken from three deputy sheriffs by a mob of about 25 men. The Spanish method of execution, "le de fuge," was used. The negroes were told to run for their lives and as they started they were shot down.

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE

A Practical, Efficient Method of Heating Without Pipes Through Only One Register

What It Does

The CALORIC, the Original Patented Pipeless Furnace, heats your entire home, new or old, three rooms to sixteen, through one register.

The CALORIC heats uniformly and thoroughly. Whether your house be of the bungalow type, with all rooms on one floor, or two or three stories high—all the rooms will be warm and comfortable.

The CALORIC saves from one-third to one-half of your fuel. The same amount of coal, coke or wood which will heat two or three rooms with stoves, will heat the entire house through the CALORIC. Or, if you are now heating your entire house, the CALORIC will do the same work better with one-half to two-thirds as much fuel.

The CALORIC is easily and quickly installed in any house, new or old, and without interfering with your present heating system. Where there is no cellar, a pit can be dug large enough to hold the furnace and the fuel supply.

The CALORIC reduces fire risk, as all the heat comes up through the center of the register, while the cool air is constantly passing down through the outer part of the register, where it comes in contact with the floor.

Over seventy-six thousand enthusiastic owners from Portland, Maine, to Portland, Oregon, testify that the CALORIC is and does all and more than we claim. The CALORIC is also giving splendid results in stores, factories, churches and halls. Can you afford not to investigate?

- and How It Does It

The CALORIC is not a pipe furnace with the pipes left off, and neither is it an experiment hastily put together for the purpose of meeting a demand. It is specially designed and built from the ground up to heat buildings more uniformly, economically and satisfactorily than they have ever been heated by other systems.

The CALORIC works through Nature's own laws of circulation by the movement of air currents. Warm air rises naturally. Cold air falls. Warm air and cold air cannot occupy the same space at the same time, any more than cold water and warm water can do so.

In the same volume that the warm air is distributed into the house, an equal amount of cold air is drawn into the furnace, where it is heated, moistened by the vapor from the two gallon water pan, and then recirculated through the register. This process continues as long as the fire is kept burning.

Thus there is created a constant circulation of properly moistened warm air. Just as running water purifies itself, so this circulating warm air, passing constantly through heat of from three hundred to eight hundred degrees, in which no germ can live, is kept pure and healthful.

Now this is merely an outline of the principles of operation of the CALORIC. A full description is given in an interesting and instructive manner in our CALORIC Catalog. Call at our store, phone or write us for a copy.

The CALORIC is manufactured and guaranteed by The Monitor Stove Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, makers of heating appliances for one hundred years.
