PORTLAND COUPLE GETS DIVORCE SECOND TIME

After a hearing in Judge Campbell's court yesterday, Willard F. Dougherty, formerly a major in the 3rd Oregon infantry, was granted a divorce from Susana Dougherty and the custody of two minor children was left to the Multnomah county juvenile court to settle. The couple had been married and divorced once before. According to the husband's statement it was through his wife's pleas that they were reunited. Charges of cruelty were brought against Mrs. Dougherty. Mr. Dougherty was for years captain of company B, 3rd Oregon infantry, and more recently was a major. He retired from that position a short time after the officers of the regiment took the federal military examinations.

Anna Brown yesterday brought suit against Henry Brown, asking a divorce, the custody of four minor children and $35 a month as alimony. They were married at Portland on October 1, 1904. Mrs. Brown charges her husband with gross cruelty, alleging that he drank to excess and gambled. Upon one occasion, she says, he broke open a bank containing the savings of one of the children and spent the money for his own purposes.

INTEREST IN MARKET

Receipts Normal, with Demands Greater than Supply on Hand

At the week's opening beginning September 10th, in the Portland Union stock yards, there was material interest shown in all departments, excepting the hog alleys. The receipts were normal, with demands greater than the supply in most departments for choice products.

The cattle market was especially active and sales were readily consummated at an advance of a strong half dollar, the packers giving evidence of a willingness to pay for properly finished material when they took the tops today at $9.75. Following quotations obtain: Best steers, $9-$9.75; good steers, $7.50-$8.75; good cows, $6.75-$7.50; ordinary, $4-$6.75; heifers, $7-$8; calves, $7-$9.50; bulls, $4-$6.75; stks. & Furs, $4.50-$7.25.

The packers seemed determined to keep the toboggan well greased under the hog market. We did not find the opening market in Portland as strong comparatively as it has been for previous weeks. The supply is fair and the demand is good, and in spite of the weak opening, the day's bargaining developed a fair market, extending to $17.25. Quotations: prime light, $16.75-$17; quote heavy, $16.50-$16.75; bulk, $16.25-$16.50; pigs, $14-$15.50.

The market in the sheep houses continues active with bulk of sales going at the top of the quotations in the various classes, and some sales being quoted beyond the top of our quotations. Ewes sold as high as 9 cents and lambs as high as 14 cents during the opening hours of the week's market and 10½ cents was the price paid for practically all wethers offered. The following quotations are holding in the sheep houses: Yearlings, $10-$10.50; wethers, $9.75-$10.50; ewes, $8-$8.50; western lambs, $13-$13.50; valley lambs, $11.75-$12.50.

POWERS GETS PAPERS

Civil War Veteran is Citizen. Scotland Furnishes Citizen

Charles Frederick Powers, of Milwaukee, a resident of the United States for many years and a veteran of the Civil war, was Monday granted a final certificate of citizenship by Judge Campbell. The aged patriot had not been required to file first papers and his application for a final certificate had been held over from the regular examination time. Mr. Powers arrived in Chicago from Canada in 1849. He followed his trade until January 2, 1864, when he enlisted for the Civil war in the 1st battery, Horse artillery, Wisconsin volunteers. He was discharged from the service in July, 1865. He is the father of four children and with his family lives at Milwaukee.

John Angus, native of Scotland, Monday filed petition for final certificate of citizenship. He is a farmer living near Sherwood and has been in the United States since he arrived at Sumas, Wash., from Canada on October 30, 1906.

BEATIE - WHITE

Son of Former Judge Marries Corvallis High School Lass

The quiet marriage Monday of John M. Beatie and Miss Louise White was much of a surprise to the friends of the young couple. The groom is a son of ex-County Judge and Mrs. Robert Beatie, of Beaver Creek, and only last year finished high school at Corvallis. It was there that the romance, which had its climax in the wedding of Monday, had its inception. Miss White was a student at the Corvallis high school. She was a resident of Norton, near Corvallis. The ceremony was performed in the parlors of the Electric hotel by the Rev. E. E. Gilbert, of the Methodist church. Only immediate relatives of the young couple were present. Mr. and Mrs. Beatie will continue to aid in the operation of the Beatie farm at Beaver Creek.

Reception for Rector

The public has been invited to a reception to be held at the Masonic Temple this evening in honor of the Rev. C. H. L. Chandler and family. Mr. Chandler is the new rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church. He started his work with the local church on September 1, coming to Oregon from San Luis Obispo, Cal. He formerly was a resident of Portland.

POULTRY AND EGGS

INSECT POULTRY PESTS.

Remedy For the Numerous Species of Lice That Infest Fowls.

Of the numerous species of lice in the United States seven are commonly found on chickens, four or five on pigeons, two or three each on geese and ducks, three on turkeys and several each on guinea fowl and peafowl. Lice have a flattened form and are fitted with spines and peculiarly modified legs, which assist them in moving about through the feathers. Certain species which remain on the larger feathers have a very narrow elongated form, which enables them to find protection in the grooves between the barbs of the feathers. Lice are not fitted for sucking blood. They feed on portions of the feathers or on the scales in the skin, but their presence in any considerable numbers is responsible for serious injury.

The Orpington breed is of English origin and is classed as a general purpose fowl. The hens are good layers of large eggs and as table birds they rank with the American breeds. The fowl shown is a Single Comb Buff Orpington male.

The seven different species of lice found on hens are spoken of as body lice, head lice and feather lice, according to the places in which they usually are found, but since the different species intermingle to a considerable extent it is not possible to separate them absolutely on this basis. Usually three or more species are to be found on one fowl.

The head louse is undoubtedly the most injurious species to young chickens. It is a dark gray species, nearly one-tenth of an inch in length. The body louse is found on the skin of the fowl rather than on the feathers. It is rather large, straw yellow in color with some dark spots, due to food within the digestive tract. It is probably the most injurious species on grown chickens, but it also infests young fowls. The shaft louse is the species spoken of by most writers as "small body louse," a name which does not fit the habits of the species. Normally it occurs along the shaft of the feathers and does not remain on the body of the host for any length of time. It resembles the large body louse somewhat, but is smaller, rather lighter yellow in color and somewhat less spiny. Although this species is probably the most common found on chickens, it is considered of less importance than the large body louse, chiefly because it stays on the feathers the greater part of the time and probably feeds exclusively on the barbs of the feathers and on scales along the shaft. It is not known to occur on young chickens. The wing louse, which is closely related to the head louse, is dark gray and has an elongated body. It is more slender, however, and rather darker in color. Three other species are found more or less commonly on chickens. These are the fowl louse, the large hen louse and the brown chicken louse.

Among the four species found on turkeys is the common body louse of chickens. The shaft louse of chickens also infests turkeys, but probably does not breed on that host. The other two species seem to be native to the turkey, probably existing on this fowl in the wild state. The large turkey louse probably is most abundant. It occurs on the feathers on various parts of the body, especially on the neck and breast. The slender turkey louse is a species of good size, though rather elongated, and resembles in shape the head louse of chickens. Normally neither of these species is excessively abundant, but on crippled or untidy turkeys they may cause serious annoyance, and undoubtedly they are injurious to poult.

While considerable numbers of lice are found on domestic geese and ducks, they seldom become sufficiently numerous to cause noticeable injury. Dusting the fowls with sodium fluoride will rid them of all lice.

Swat the Rooster.

Hens without the presence of the males will lay more eggs, will be in better plumage, moult better, be better content and lay eggs that will infinitely keep better. In fact, the latter is the great reason for this campaign against the rooster, for without him eggs will be sterile or infertile. Now, infertile or sterile eggs stand heat much better—in fact, under the influence of any temperature, henhouses, depot platform, freight car en route or corner grocery. Above 90 degrees, if the egg is a fertile egg, the germ is quickened or life started. Later this dies, and there is a spoiled egg.

VANDALS CHARGED WITH CUTTING PHONE WIRES

The Home Telephone system between Portland and Oregon City was paralyzed Friday morning, probably through the maliciousness of some unknown. Where the several lines of the company cross the Clackamas river the wires had been cut and Friday morning the company had a crew at work attempting to repair the damage, while Sheriff W. J. Wilson and a corps of deputies were at the scene attempting to solve the mystery.

The service of the company was cut out at about 7 o'clock Thursday night, indicating that the cut was made at that time. Sheriff Wilson would not commit himself to the extent of saying that the wires were cut intentionally, and indicated that they might have been broken. However, as there were several wires down the belief is strong that human hands did the damage. The fact that the wires were down made it impossible to use most of the lines in and out of Oregon City.

AFTER THREE YEARS Oregon City Testimony Remains Unshaken

Time is the best test of truth. Here is an Oregon City story that has stood the test of time. It is a story with a point which will come straight home to many of us.

Mrs. Thos. Blanchard, Sr., 1102 John Adams St., says: "I used Doan's Kidney Pills for kidney and bladder trouble that had annoyed me for years and received good relief. I have taken in all less than two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills but they have shown their merit so that I can endorse them and advise their use to others."

The above statement was given on April 4, 1913 and on April 17, 1916 Mrs. Blanchard said: "I have certainly found Doan's Kidney Pills to be all that is claimed for them. Whenever I have occasion to take a kidney medicine I use Doan's for I know they are most reliable."

PATRIOTIC DIVORCE PRAYER

Portland Couple Packs Files with Papers in Divorce Case

A prominent Portland couple has been helping to pack county files with papers in a divorce case brought by the wife recently, and one of such papers is the husband's demurrer to his wife's complaint. The couple, it appears, was married and divorced upon a previous occasion, and when the husband was recently called to war as an officer in the 3d Oregon infantry his wife again sued for divorce. The following prayer is appended to the husband's demurrer to her complaint:

"He prays that the suit be dismissed and that defendant be permitted to await the perils and hazards of war, trusting that a higher power will return plaintiff safe and sound to the arms of defendant."

Satan Outclassed

The devil sat by a lake of fire on a pile of sulphur kegs; his head was bowed upon his breast, his tail between his legs; a look of shame was upon his face—the sparks dripped from his eyes—he had sent up his resignation to the throne up in the skies.

"I'm down and out," the devil said—he said it with a sob—"there are others that outclass me, and I want to quit my job. Hell is not in it with the land upon the Rhine; I'm a has-been and a piker and therefore I resign. One ammunition maker with his make of shot and shell knows more about damnation than all theimps in hell. Give my job to kaiser Wilhelm, the author of this war—he understands it better, a million times far, I hate to leave the old home, the spot I love so well, but I feel that I'm not up-to-date in the art of running hell."

Many Will Enroll

"Everything indicates a good enrollment at the University of Oregon when college opens October 1," says Registrar A. R. Tiffany. Mr. Tiffany bases his estimate on responses to letters recently sent out to those who were students at the University last year, asking them to indicate whether they expected to return this fall. The responses indicate that for every student who will not return or is undecided, six expect to be on hand when college opens. Though more than 150 men who were students in the university last year are now enlisted in some branch of military service, the returns indicate that as many men as women expect to go on with their education at the university next term. With the opening of college nearly as many applications are on file as at this time last year from students who will enter as freshmen.

America's War

The importance of the fall of Riga is not so much a matter of the loss of a strategic military point as it is the indication of a general demoralization of the Russian army if not of the Russian government.

However, considered from its military significance, its loss is a real blow to the allies.

With an import and export trade totaling $100,000,000 two years before the outbreak of the world war, Riga became the third seaport of the Russian empire, and the second seaport of the Baltic, being surpassed in volume of business by Petrograd.

The importance of Riga as a seaport is due in very large measure to the fact that by means of the Dvina and numerous canals, it is connected by water with the basins of the Volga, which flows into the Caspian, and the Dnieper, which enters the Black Sea. Thus, practically the whole of southern, central and western European Russia can find an outlet into the Baltic through this port. In addition to cheap water transportation, a railroad runs across Russia from Riga to Emmonok and Tarsitsyn, almost bisecting the empire.

Riga is a great storehouse for Russian wheat, oats and hemp, three items which constitute a large portion of the city's exports. It is also the chief port for the vast timber products of the province of Volhynia.

The loss of Riga carried with it a very definite danger to Russia's capital and greatest city, Petrograd. Already word has been given out that the provisional government is contemplating a retirement to the ancient capital of Moscow. There would be a political significance to this move not ordinarily understood. Petrograd has become "modernized" and "Germanized" to an extent that makes it anything but typical of the real Russian people. Moscow, on the other hand, is the center of the old Russia, the slav Russia, which has never amalgamated with the Hun, Saxon or Celtic civilization of western Europe.

Some publicists see in Germany's thrust into Russia of the Russians another typical blunder which may unite the people of that unhappy country under the stress of the necessity of actual defense. Plain it is that the one thing which must be brought about to save the Russian people from the domination of Prussian militarism is a welding of the great masses behind some government or some man who can wield over them an authority which is well nigh absolute—at least, during the duration of the war.

More than ever before has the mistake that Russia made in her swing away from Czarism in going too far toward the other extreme and undertaking to establish such a democracy that, under the phase of a national socialism when every man should be the equal of every other man and none be given authority over others, a stable government capable of effective military operations, has proven impossible. Could the Russia revolution have occurred at a time when that nation was not at war, the Slavs could, in time, work out a form of government which would be permanent and genuinely democratic. What may happen to her with the ambition of kaiserism pushing a trained German army into a Russia where the army refuses to recognize commanding authority and consequently flees in disorder, is one of the most serious problems of recent years.

To America the Russian situation brings this message:—Just to the extent that Russia has crumbled and failed, to that extent America must fill the breach and carry a double burden in the world's fight against the tyranny of military ambition. America can and will shoulder the burden but it will be a mighty task before the absolutely necessary attainments for which free people are fighting, have been accomplished.—Rogue River Courier.

ARMY CAN STUDY

University to Follow Boys Wherever They Care to Go Work

Attorney General Brown has ruled that the extension division of the University of Oregon may legally offer extension class work outside of the state for the purpose of serving enlisted men at Vancouver barracks who are citizens of Oregon. The army at Vancouver barracks and Fort Stevens and will offer extension work if there is demand for it. Cooperation of the university has been asked in both instances. The extension division, following its policy of wartime service first, will respond to both requests as fully as possible.

All of the 80 correspondence courses of the University of Oregon in high school and college subjects are open to soldiers who are citizens of Oregon. Numbers of applications have been received from men in the service who find that they have just a little time to put on college or high school work.

"Lesson papers sent in from 'somewhere in France' by men who prefer to do a little studying in spare time that otherwise would be given to light reading will receive special consideration," said Miss Mozelle Hair, secretary of extension teaching at the university.

The motto "The State is the Campus" hitherto used to describe university extension work in Oregon means that any place in the world where an Oregon man or woman serves Uncle Sam is part of the campus of the University of Oregon.
