YUKON COUNTRY LAND OF SILENCE

Yukon river up stream from St. Michael. These are the only two entrances to a territory whose boundary is as great as a circle around the globe, excepting the government trail from Seward.

"Can't one pack in from any coast town?" a tourist asked me, when I had made this statement.

"Try it," I replied.

If one had a pack pony in summer or a dog team in winter, he could start, but he would never get through or come back. He would even have to carry the feed for his horse, for there is little more than moss and brush to eat. If he went with dogs they would eat him when the provisions ran out. There are no trails, no road houses, no anything. It would simply be an awful means of suicide.

The government railroad from Anchorage north to Fairbanks will some day make a third gateway to central Alaska, and a cut off the hundreds of miles that now have to be made through the Yukon Territory, and it will also hasten the finish to the already dying towns along that route. But the road is a long way from completion yet, and whether it can be kept open and maintained is indeed a very big guess. None but Uncle Sam would have risked $75,000,000 on such a venture. But more of this later.

Alaska is "the wild." It is a country of few pleasures and many perils. It is a horseless, womanless country. Over the whole land is brooding silence and mystery. It is full of hardship, sadness, homesickness. It is a land without comforts, a land without laughter. One long night in winter, one long day in summer, with perpetual twilight, bright, green and mysterious.

Yet men come here and stay here.

become Gypsy followers of the trail, lured on by the gamblers' hope of "a strike." It's a land where life is reduced to elements, where men "let go" and raise whiskers and hell. It's a country of "what-the-hell-do-we-care," where the bars are let down and men descend down the river I had a state room companion, a young fellow with an old face, seared with the wrinkles of hardship and exposure. He told me he had been in Alaska nine years and had been vainly trying for the last nine months to get out.

"I go up against it harder than a 'Cheechako,' said he, and if this bunch of tourists wants to reach St. Michael they had better chuck me overboard. I'm sure out of luck and I'll hoodoo the boat. I hit the trail over to Forty Mile last September and missed the last boat down by an hour. I blomed about all I had, then rushed back and went to work on the railroad at Fairbanks with a surveying gang. Two weeks ago I came over and just missed the boat. Now I am going to make one last jump for the outside and if I miss this chance I'm going to marry an Eskimo and be a 'squaw man.'"

I saw this man stand at the bar and drink one after another full glasses of raw whiskey, then suddenly fall like a dead man. I have seen several men fall this way—suddenly collapse in a heap—and the only explanation I got was "they do that way in Alaska." But I deduced a better explanation—the whiskey may be uncertain in percentage but its potency is unquestioned. It has the "kick."

Later, as I became acquainted with this man, I found he had had two years in college, and was a very agreeable roommate.

He said he took engineering but since he had been in Alaska he had only worked at it to get grub stakes and had prospected most of the time.

"I've seen fellows strike it above me, below me, both sides of me and underneath me, but I never found a yard of rich gold yet. A pay streak would get up and drag it if it saw me coming. I've had a belfry—me for the outside, if I can ever make it."

I got acquainted with another fellow, a miner, through the exchange of reading matter. He had been 22 years in Alaska, came in before the stampede, and he had never made a strike worth while. Last year he said he located a claim that looked like a shiner, and took out a few hundred dollars, then it "went phlooe."

"It's a 'pocket' country—there's no figuring it out. You may take out a few buckets from bed rock that will run $500 to the bucket, then it goes dry and you can thaw acres of ground without finding another ounce. Damn such a country."

This man was about half dead from the excessive use of tobacco. Snuff, cigarettes, cigars, pipe, plug—he took them down the line in succession. He said he was on his way to eastern Oregon, to the hot springs, where he was going to boil out and quit, then he was going to invest his few hundred dollars in a little piece of land and remember Alaska only as a nightmare.

Below Marshall two miners boarded the boat in the night. They had a beautiful jag on, and occupying an adjoining room they banished sleep for me. In the morning one of them, a Swede, sat opposite me at breakfast, and he told me the other fellow had "made his strike," cleaned up a nice roll and was going "outside."

I sized up the lucky fellow later on, a coarse, blue-eyed man, half dead with bronchitis, and I wondered if his "strike" was worth the awful price he had paid for it—15 years of alternate river work and prospecting—and I wondered how long that money would stay with him when he got among the wolves in Seattle.

And one more: A man about 32, a Swede, a quiet, gentlemanly, educated fellow, with a something about him that attracted. And he told the same old story—years of the hardest labor and worst of exposures. He was one of the lucky ones at Willow Creek, made his "strike" and sold out for a nice roll. "I have seen too many men made beasts of in this country to stay any longer," he said.

Later, when I told him I was from Corvallis, Ore., he said: "When you see Editor E. T. Reed again, tell him you met his former student in Minnesota, Stephen L. Bergh, and ask him if he remembers me."

In the interior of Alaska a man without a trade or profession—the working man who can stand the gaff—stands a far better chance. There is little demand for the trades. The miner, the experienced "sour dough" man, can get better pay for his labor than in any other part of the United States. He can get $5 a day and board, seven days in the week, but the work is the kind that wears a man's heart out.

These men will go out to the mines, work like mules and live like dogs. For weeks, perhaps months, they will practice the most rigid economy, mending, making and patching their clothes. Then they will go into a river town and blow every last dollar, from $500 to $1000, in three or four days. Drunken on the poisonous whiskey, they simply sow their money broadcast. Then go back to the mines.

There are some exceptions, perhaps many, where the men instead of blowing the money at the bars, put it into grubstakes and go out prospecting, and after weeks, sometimes months, they mush back, exhausted and disappointed.

There is one trade, carpenter, that pays high wages in Alaska—when there is any work, when a new strike shows enough permanency to guarantee a town at the nearest river point. Then carpenters can get all the way from $1 to $2 per hour. But the work does not last long.

Here are a few prices that miners have to pay in the new strikes, before the camp gets settled enough to build trails for freighting. These are prices in the places hard to reach: Flour $19 per hundred; potatoes $22 per hundred; eggs $30 per crate, and all other provisions in proportion. From which you can readily see that a miner must have rich dirt or he can't stay long. Twelve cents a pound is often paid for having provisions packed into the new strikes on the small streams far back from the Yukon.

And it is these awful expenses that hold men back from prospecting territory that may cover many another Bonanza.

Note—This letter is rather out of its turn in the series. It was written weeks after I left Dawson, and is based on reliable information obtained from miners and from personal observation in many of the river towns and mining camps. The next letter will start from Dawson and the following letters will relate the interesting incidents and stories of an 1800-mile trip down the river to St. Michael and to Nome.

STOCK CONDITIONS ARE SOMEWHAT BELOW NORMAL

Stock conditions in Oregon are perhaps a little below the normal, but there is nothing to be feared, is the opinion of Will O. Barnes, assistant forester of the United States, in charge of grazing in the national forests.

Mr. Barnes has visited the majority of the reserves in the Pacific coast and finds that range conditions are decidedly spotted. In some places, like Arizona and New Mexico, the stockmen rarely experience such a good year for the industry as this has been. On the other hand, in other states of the west, the range is only fair. In Montana the winter range is dried out, and stockmen are pretty well discouraged.

The condition is true to a more limited extent in Oregon, but different from Montana. Mr. Barnes finds that there is plenty of feed, although it is held at high prices. Much of the hay in this district is in the hands of speculators, and it may be necessary, if conditions should grow worse, for the government to take a hand and fix a price for hay as it has for wheat. It would be a much more difficult proceeding, however, and the possibility of such action is extremely remote.

Mr. Barnes believes that the stockmen will find it necessary to cut down their herds to a point where they will be sure to be able to carry them through the winter successfully. They had their fingers burned last year and will not take the same chance this year, he pointed out.

Such a selling campaign, however, will not be likely to greatly decrease the stock in the nation, he believes, for the reason that buyers in other sections, where feed is more plentiful, will probably take the stock that is sold from such sections as this and will result in a better distribution of the herds.

With the price of stock of all kinds at a point where it is today, there is no likelihood that the grower will be inclined to dispose of more than is absolutely necessary to permit him to go through the winter. Mr. Barnes believes, nevertheless, despite the requests of the food conservation administration that stockmen refrain from selling, there is bound to be a diminution of the herds of this and similarly situated districts. There is, however, little cause for alarm.

Summons

In the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon for the County of Clackamas.

Grace Everson, Plaintiff,

Fred L. Everson, Defendant.

In the Name of the State of Oregon you are hereby required to appear and answer the petition filed against you in the above entitled suit on or before the expiration of six weeks from the date of the first publication of this summons, to-wit: on or before the last day of November 1917, and if you so fail to appear and answer the defendant will apply to the court for the relief prayed for in said petition, to-wit: for an order and decree modifying the decree rendered in the above entitled court and cause on the 13th day of December, 1913, and subsequently modified on the 9th day of June, 1917, and that said decree be so modified as to award to the defendant the care and custody of Jane Everson, the minor child of plaintiff and defendant, and that the plaintiff be enjoined and restrained from taking said minor child away from the custody of the defendant, and for such other and further relief as to the court may appear equitable.

The order for the publication of the summons herein is dated September 19th, 1917, and it requires you to appear within six weeks from the date of the first publication of the summons herein. This summons is served upon you by publication once a week for six consecutive weeks in the Oregon City Courier, a newspaper of general circulation published in Oregon City, Clackamas County, Oregon, pursuant to an order of Hon. J. U. Campbell, Judge of the above entitled court, and entered on the 19th day of September, 1917.

MOUNT PLEASANT

We are all more or less interested in the county fair. Mount Pleasant is surely represented, with Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Lawton at our headquarters. Mrs. H. E. King has charge of the art department. Mount Pleasant expects to get its share of premiums.

The many friends of Miss Ella Williams will be pleased to hear that she is improving from her illness. Mrs. Moberg, formerly Miss Ida Pease, is improving. She had one toe amputated but will soon be at home.

Miss Mildred Akin, formerly principle of the Mount Pleasant school, but later of Sandy, spent her vacation at her home in Los Angeles.

The Mount Pleasant school opened Monday. H. L. Andrews of Sellwood, better known as "Deacon" was up Monday looking after his farm. Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Stafford had a long letter from their son, Roy. He is "somewhere in France." He was one of the first to be sent. Mrs. Thornton of Helena, Mont., a niece of Mrs. Dan O'Neil, of Rose farm, is spending the summer here. John Christenson is making all preparations to start his prune dryer in a few days.

Mount Pleasant congratulates Mr. and Mrs. Carl Joehne on the arrival of their fine son, born Monday. Mr. and Mrs. Joehne were born and raised at Mount Pleasant.

Edwin Smith spent Sunday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Smith. Elvin is now on his way to South Carolina.

Mrs. E. M. Bechtel, who lives in Washington, but who has been spending the past few months with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Clyde, of South Pasadena, Cal., is now visiting her sister, Mrs. La Dioux, and family. Mr. Clyde, who for many years was a resident of Parkplace, has been seriously ill, but is now slightly better.

Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Beeman and Mrs. Alexander, of Portland, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Smith.

Sadonia Crookshanks and brother, Bruce, were guests of Mrs. Coffey Saturday and Sunday. Mrs. Haas, of Sellwood, spent Sunday and Monday as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Nick Rivers.

I Recommend Peruna To All Sufferers Of Catarrh—

Mrs. William H. Hinchliffe, No. 20

I Do Not Think I Ever Felt Much Better

Myrtle St. Beverly, Mass., writes: "I have taken four bottles of Peruna, and I can say that it has done me a great deal of good for catarrh of the head and throat. I recommend Peruna to all sufferers with catarrh. I do not think I ever felt much better. I am really surprised at the work I can do. I do not think too much praise can be said for Peruna."

Those who object to liquid medicines can procure Peruna Tablets.

DIED

Nicholas H. Darnall

Nicholas H. Darnall, a civil war veteran and resident of Mulino since the war ended, died at his home here Friday. He was 76 years old and crossed the plains to Oregon 52 years ago. The funeral was held Sunday morning at 11:30. Burial was at Mountain View cemetery in this city. Multnomah lodge A. F. and A. M., had charge of the funeral, and the G. A. R., of which Mr. Darnall was a member, took part. He is survived by a sister in the east, and a son, John, at Mulino.

WOMEN MAY REGISTER

Related Patriots May Sign for Service with Proper Officers

All women who did not have an opportunity to enroll for war service at the official government registration held last Saturday may do so this week by reporting to precinct chairmen.

It will be a great help to the government later or perhaps in the near future to know just what service each woman in the land can do and just how much time she can give to this service. This is the purpose of the registration.

There has been quite a little confusion in the minds of women of the city as to the necessity for this registration, as to whether this was an official registration and as to whether the government could draft each woman who signs up these cards. The names are being taken at the request of the government but it is a purely voluntary matter, and registering implies nothing but a moral obligation.

A judgment order signed Tuesday by Judge Campbell gives Joseph Shemanski the sum of $2650 with 8 per cent interest from December 29, 1914, in his suit against S. M. and Mabel Shaver.
