THE SENSATIONAL RISE IN THE PRICE OF FLOUR makes a higher price for bread inevitable. If the bakers do not advance the price of the single loaf, they must reduce its size, or dilute its quality.

For the poor immigrant, who often pays not over $1.00 a week for food, bread is the main dependence. He may not have his kettle of soup, brewed from bony hunks of meat that no one else will touch. But this costs little, and is merely an appetizer. His long rolled loaf, serving for several meals, is the main backbone for his muscular task. When he acquires a family his board bill increases, but a household of bread eaters lives cheaply. But at 25 to 50 per cent advance is a blow.

Mrs. Julian Heath, of New York, president of the Housewives' league, says that in this emergency, more families should accustom themselves to the use of corn bread, the price of which has not risen appreciably. Also much might be said of the value and healthfulness of rye.

It is a singular fact that a great many well to do families always use corn and rye flour prominently, preferring their flavor, while many poor families continue to stick to white wheat flour, even in times of scarcity, and in spite of the fact that much of the nutriment of wheat is lost in the process of bolting.

In many old time homes, corn johnny cake was a special treat that made the children's eyes sparkle. Served steaming hot, it brought the comfort of summer sunshine on a wintry morning, and its golden color made it seem almost like sponge cake.

Hasty pudding was another staple that the old timers would prefer to the most fancy dessert your modern cook would devise. White flour products will come high before the new crop is on the market, and thrifty cooks will seek substitutes.

THE SULLIVAN INVESTIGATION being taken in New York city before Senator-elect James D. Phelan not only casts a severe reflection on American diplomatic service but on the administration as well. Secretary Bryan's letter to Walker W. Vick, former receiver of customs in San Domingo, is now country-wide famous. It follows in part:

"Now that you have arrived and are acquainting yourself with the situation, can you let me know what positions you have at your disposal with which to reward deserving Democrats? * * * You have had enough political experience to know how valuable workers are when the campaign is on and how difficult it is to find suitable rewards for all the deserving."

The incident has the same air as a recent conversation between David James Hill, who was at one time American ambassador to Germany, a wealthy American living abroad, who was trying to break into society, and a titled German. The German asked the wealthy American whose efforts to enter European society were not entirely successful: "Why don't you return to your own country and buy an ambassadorship?"

The question, apparently sincere, caused a painful silence. The wealthy American laughed awkwardly and said nothing. Ambassador Hill, however, filled with resentment, turned to the questioner and asked: "How much an ambassadorship cost in your country?"

"Thirty years of service," replied the foreigner calmly and there was nothing more to say.

THERE IS A GROWING SPIRIT OF ANTAGONISM between the Estacada section and the rest of the county, which, during the last few weeks, has made itself evident several ways.

The bill, now before the state legislature, which provides that counties may be split without giving the old county a voice in the affair and without even an election, was introduced at the request of Estacada men acting with residents of another town in a similar condition. It is true that probably the motive for the Estacada boosters is largely the desire to make the town a county seat for the new county, but behind that there is general ill feeling against Oregon City.

The Estacada Progress voices the sentiments of this faction that would stir trouble between. This paper finds fault with the heading on the monthly publication of the Oregon City Commercial club, "Oregon City and Clackamas County Publicity," in a story which is captioned "Oregon City First." The Live Wires of the Commercial club, a body of real boosters, are held in contempt and with each week's issue there is some insinuation against them.

The interests of eastern and western Clackamas county are the same. There is no feeling here against people of the Estacada section. The eastern part of the county is considered as important in the county as a whole as Colton, Canby, Molalla or Willott.

The Progress, with its constant plugging, is probably responsible for this factional feeling which in time may cause serious trouble. The election held several years ago to divide the county showed that the voters as a whole believed the county should be preserved as a unit.

The Enterprise feels that whenever the majority of the people of eastern Clackamas county want to create a new county, and can do so without injuring in a material way the real interests of Clackamas, that they should be allowed to go. But they must first show conclusively that they are entitled to a new county, and that the best interests of their own people demand it. It must have more sentiment behind it than the desire of a thriving little town to become a county seat and the ambitions of a few people to become political leaders.

FEW YEARS AGO it seemed as if the problem of the country district school had been permanently solved, thanks to the idea of concentrating schools in centers, and transporting the children. This idea has spread all over the country. It has at least enabled schools to be better graded. Fewer teachers and less janitor service do the work, and a better grade of teachers can be employed.

As time has gone on the defects of the system become more apparent. Except in the more southerly sections of the country, there are many complaints about exposure of children during winter weather. The men hired as drivers are often not dependable or responsible. Mothers dislike to send children under such care, particularly during freezing or stormy weather.

Under the old time method of small district schools, the larger part of the children could go home at noon, even through the bad travelling and cold weather of winter. Transportation makes it necessary for the youngsters to carry cold lunches.

When the transportation idea was first tried out, labor was less well paid. A competent man and team could be had for a reasonable price. The cost of running transportation wagons has largely increased. Now it often balances the greater expense of running separate schools.

Sentiment in the farming districts seems rather against the school consolidation and transportation idea. It is claimed that the little red school-house within a mile of the farm makes real estate more valuable, supplies a social center, and helps make country life more attractive. It is a problem that every school district must fight out for itself. But there is danger both to the health and morals of children, if the transportation is not carefully regulated.

YEARS AGO IN COUNTRY LIFE the pork barrel was the grand reservoir for the family dining room. Crops might fail, and beef might run high. But the old farm home had a reserve of pork salted down that added its appetizing tang to other more neutral foods.

Today the stock of canned goods on the pantry shelf forms a similar reserve. Preserving food products has grown to be one of the country's great industries. There is general interest in the meeting at New York the past week of the National Canners' association. The president of the association announced a campaign of education to convince the public of the wholesomeness of their products.

In fruits every village always had its famous makers of preserves. Mrs. Smith's peaches or Mrs. Jones' plums were quite as delectable as the original fruit off the trees. Today many varieties of canned fish are better than the so-called fresh articles at points some distance from the seashore. Bacon is put up with a seasoned tang superior to any slice that can be cut from the freshly killed animal.

The public will never stand for inferior articles of food. It is not sufficient that a canned product shall be merely wholesome, though that is the first essential. It must be palatable and appetizing or it will never be popular. It ought to be possible to take any kind of meat, vegetable, or fruit, and so season it that it shall be attractive for any table, at a much cheaper rate than well be paid for the product fresh from the farm.

Well advertised products are the safest. "They show that manufacturers and retailers are confident enough of their merit to be willing to spend money to familiarize the public with their good qualities."

ARMY MEN AND NAVY MEN have seized on the present situation to urge that this country build up its sea and land forces. They tell us that the present defenses of the United States are nothing more or less than a joke and that no European country takes them seriously.

But there is one thing that Europe does take seriously. The belligerents realize that American wheat fields are now feeding the greater part of the globe, that American money, when the present conflict is past, will control the money markets of the world and that in this country there lies the possibility of still greater growth and power. The grain of this nation is the cause of the latest squabble between the powers across the Atlantic concerning the blockade of the North sea.

But drop our interior development; forget our great national projects, our federal roads and canals; levy a tax on every thing from candy to window glass and build a fleet and equip an army. Be prepared for war. What care we that it is a world old adage that the man with a loaded gun is bound to shoot? Let's put a chip on our shoulder. The man who is always ready to fight found an opponent all the way down history from Adam to Kaiser Wilhelm and King George.

Multnomah county granges are beginning to wake up to the fact that macadam roads are a waste and that the only permanent highway is a hard-surface one. "There is no question but that the time has come when hard-surface must be laid on our county roads. The ordinary crushed rock will not stand much longer than 90 days under the present heavy traffic," said one of the prominent grangers recently.

FORUM OF THE PEOPLE

Give Molalla Its Due.

MOLALLA, Ore., Feb. 17.—(Editor of the Enterprise)—I see in the February 11 Enterprise that Oregon City has arranged final plans for Williamette Valley Southern Day program, subject perhaps, to some minor changes. Molalla objects to be shipped about geographically and waggled at the tail end of the even merely as an ornament to the real thing all day long. Why not make the event spell some history, true to the occasion, with a spirit of as "they come in order" fairness? Don't you think that nineteenth of the observing public would think it would look better if President G. B. Dimick passed the "golden spike" to the Mayor of Molalla and he pass it on to the Mayor of McLangel? And to make the even more intensely historic, would suggest that S. Wright be placed on guard at the "passing."

ALBANY FIRE DOES $105,000 DAMAGE

ALBANY, Ore., Feb. 12.—A loss of $105,000 was caused by a fire which completely gutted the Wallace block, containing the big Hamilton store, and damaged adjoining buildings and stocks of other stores in the heart of Albany's business district this afternoon. The damage is covered by $69,700 insurance, most of the smaller losses of the fire being fully insured. Smoke spread through the second floors of other structures and, with several buildings in danger, a request for aid was sent to Corvallis department hurried to Albany in automobiles, bringing 850 feet of hose. They arrived in less than an hour from the time they were summoned, and while the fire was almost under control when they arrived, rendered valuable assistance in keeping it within limits and in subduing it ultimately.

The Twilight Sleep Is Belittled In Use For Years Says Doctor

OREGON CITY, Ore., Feb. 15.—(Editor of the Enterprise)—Since the advertisement of the twilight sleep appeared in the Enterprise about a week ago, I have had many enquiries regarding the same. I wish to state to the public through your columns that the twilight sleep remedy in obstetrics and minor surgical work is not new to the medical profession in this country. About six or seven years ago it was thoroughly discussed in the medical journals published on this coast and elsewhere in the United States. The majority of physicians have not taken to it kindly and most of them have discontinued its use. In rapid, painful labors, it acts very nicely, but in slow cases its use is contradicted as blue babies result, and are very hard to resuscitate and some have been still-born from its use. This has been the verdict of those who have reported its use through the medical journals, and coincides with my personal experience, which extends over a period of eight years here in and around Oregon City. The last case I used the twilight remedy in was Mrs. William G. Hettman, 226 Monroe street, January 12, 1915, announcing to her at the time of the treatment used. Her labor was rapid and painful, therefore I considered it safe and it acted very nicely. The treatment is very simple and any physician or nurse can use it, as it requires no skill. It consists of a hypodermic injection of morphine and scopolamine, repeating the scopolamine portion as required. In conclusion, will say that in booming this remedy we must be cautious and not forget the Friedmann turtle serum, which over-shadowed the twilight sleep remedy at one time. Often an enthusiast only needs more experience to make him more conservative and safe. Respectfully,

Allen Eaton Deplores Much Wasted Time Work of the Legislative Session is Reviewed Many Unimportant Bills Introduced He Says

(By Allen Eaton.)

SALEM, Ore., Feb. 18.—This is the 21st day of the legislative session. The business in the house has been slightly advanced since the adjournment Friday, but new matters presented, together with bills coming from the senate, have made it necessary to begin the night sessions, so that a special session has been called tonight for the purpose of considering senate bills. The senate is becoming fretful because of the delay of the house in considering bills that have come from the lower body.

Yesterday the house spent from 9 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock in the evening on six measures. Five hours of this time was spent on the bill ratifying the lease made to Jason Moore for the Summer and Abert lakes. This very important matter probably would have been disposed of in half an hour's time had not those who were in charge of matters insisted that the bill be rushed through. A motion made early in the day to make the bill a special order for the next day at ten o'clock would have saved the house probably four hours time, because the information which a few desired to get, could have been acquired without taking the time of the whole house for it. The final result was that the lease was ratified by an overwhelming vote. The experience with this measure illustrates what has happened a number of times during the session and that is, that any attempt to railroad a measure through will invariably take more time than would be necessary for a fair investigation.

While the house passed a rule that no appropriation bills should be introduced after the 20th day of the session, it is apparent that they will be introduced up to the 35th day of the session. However, a number of the more important appropriation measures have been presented to the house and have been disposed of, and the ways and means committee have been earnest in their efforts to advance the work. Too many measures have been referred to them and the committee on claims and other house committees could well have assisted them in their work, but the rule to refer everything bearing on appropriations to this committee has overloaded them while other equally able committees have had nothing to do. The committee on ways and means has been most industrious although the amount of business which it has considered has been approximated by the judiciary revision of laws committee. These latter two committees have considered almost as many bills as the forty other committees combined. Most of these bills are not important and should not have been presented. The great majority of them are from lawyer members of the house who invariably insist on tampering with laws already on the statute books. The trouble about most of these bills is that the less important they are, the more time is generally consumed in discussing them, and as a consequence they deprive the house of the time that ought to be spent in a thorough discussion of the more important measures. This is the disadvantage which the legislature experiences, which, after all, is a small evil compared with the constant changing of the state laws.

Aside from the ratification of the lease on the southern Oregon lakes, yesterday's session was notable for the somewhat heated and extended debate on the support for the girls' industrial school. A number of members have talked very feelingly on this matter but the speech which was most effective was that of Miss Marian Towne of Jackson county, whose position was strongly affirmed by the house, when, after her remarks, the ways and means committee was instructed to prepare a bill providing for the amount asked for the support of the girls' industrial school. The bill was prepared over night and presented this morning, and will undoubtedly pass when it comes to a vote.

The governor has signed nine senate bills and 27 house bills. Of these 36, the most important are senate bills No. 9 by Mr. Dimick, abolishing the office of state immigration agent and the house bills by Dr. Smith and one by Mr. Huston preserving the scenic attractions of the Oregon state highways. Both houses have been rather slow in getting their measures up to the governor but he will be very busy from now on as several hundred bills are headed his way.

Since last week's letter both the house and the senate have been industriously at work but the results have been rather small. By next week a great deal should have been accomplished, and it would be a splendid thing if we could devise some plan to select the most important bills and leave the others (which would include a great majority) on the table to die a natural and deserved death.

MILLIKEN PLEADS FOR NEUTRALITY

GERMANS SHOULD OBSERVE PROCLAMATION AS DO BRITONS, HE SAYS

WORLD MARKETS DECLARED OPEN

Minister Maintains United States Has Right to Sell Products to Any Power—Plea for Fairness Made

OREGON CITY, Ore., Feb. 16.—(Editor of the Enterprise)—I am a sincere admirer of the German people. Some of the best friends I have in the world are Germans. Their greatness is truly demonstrated by the heroic efforts they are putting up against the combined armies of three great European powers. Our German friends are amongst our best citizens. They are religious, law-abiding, and intelligent. Hence it is with sincere regret that a host of their friends find them showing an absolute disregard for the feelings of their friends and neighbors who chance to be of British, French and Russian extraction—a body of people who outnumber them in nearly every community in the land. We are ready to pardon this zeal for their Fatherland, but we appeal to their well-preserving the absolute neutrality of the land of our adoption.

To illustrate that I mean, I belong to a couple of societies composed largely of ex-British subjects, with combined membership larger than the localverein. Yet has anyone ever heard a word of comment from these societies upon the war? We held a public gathering not long since to collect money for the Red Cross movement. Our members and sympathizers packed the Woodman's hall. Yet not a single word was said to favor one side or the other in the European conflict. Is it asking too much of our friends of German extraction that they show the same forbearance? We love our Motherland as much as they, yet we love them too much and have too high a regard for the neutrality of the land of our adoption to endeavor to stir up partisan feeling. We have invited no speakers, and have not even attempted to answer attacks upon Britain that we have felt to be unjustifiable.

I think I can truly say that we are first Americans, then Americans some more, and if one of our number had shown himself as entirely lacking in the good grace of regard for his German-American neighbor as Rev. Mau has for his neighbor of British extraction we would either have muzzleed him or shipped him back to Europe where he belongs. He certainly would have no right to the name "American" until he had learned to have regard for the feeling of his fellow citizens so—unfortunate—or fortunate (?) as to have blood in their veins alien to his own.

A word as to our president's supposed partiality. During the Civil war England shipped supplies of food and war munitions to both North and South. Really the south was their best consumer. The north finally declared a blockade against the southern ports, and undertook to starve them out. Now England might have declared war upon the north, thus directly violating her neutrality in an attempt to compel the raising of the blockade. She might have violated it just as effectively by saying: "We'll compel you to raise the blockade by refusing to sell to you." This would have afforded the south the most material kind of help, and would have been just as much a breach of neutrality as it would have been to declare war. Instead she said: "We are absolutely neutral. We will sell with equal readiness to both sides. If one side is so blockaded that they cannot buy from us, it is not our fault but their misfortune. We are still open to the world. And for us to declare a food blockade against one side because it has succeeded in cutting off the other from securing supplies would be violating our neutrality. All we can do is to open our markets to the world alike, and to hold ourselves free from responsibility as to whether they manage to reach them or not. The moment we attempt to force one nation to let the other nations have an equal chance with themselves we become belligerents." Anyone except a fool or a bigot ought to be able to see this at once.

In the case of the present war conditions are exactly similar. America is neutral. Her markets are open to the world. Part of the war game always has been to cut off the enemy from his base of supplies. This part of the business belongs wholly to the belligerents. Our supplies and our markets are equally open to all parties. If the Germans should succeed in sweeping the British fleet from the seas, and in blockading Britain, they would at once consider it equivalent to a declaration of war for us to refuse to sell them anything until they should raise the blockade. We would be thereby most effectively aiding their enemy. We certainly could not claim to be neutral, as we would be nullifying their advantage and aiding to bring their enemy up to the same advantage.

Now are we going to aid Germany and counteract the advantage gained by Britain, thus assisting Germany both directly and indirectly, by discriminating against the Allies in our trade? Down in his gizzard every man of them knows that what he wants is not neutrality but direct aid to Germany by hitting a blow at Britain and France. This would be a direct blow at neutrality. It would make America a pro-German belligerent. It would be an insult on behalf of the German minority aimed at the majority of the American people who are of British descent. Be fair, brothers! You always have been noted for your clear-sightedness and fairness. Be fair and unite with us in keeping fair and race prejudice out of our American communities, and in helping our children to forget that they are British or German, of French, or Austrian, and in helping them to remember only that they are American.

No man knows how this war will turn out. Rev. Mau says Germany will win. Lloyd George calls attention to the fact that the Allies have sent but one-third of their available forces into the field up to date. When the war began the French and British leaders laid their plans upon the estimate of a three to five years war, and they are still working to that schedule. Thus neither Rev. Mau nor the most rabid pro-British partisan in America can prophesy with any certainty. But what is it to us? We have sworn allegiance to America. England's interest, or France's interest, or Germany's interest is nothing to us. But it is up to us to be equally fair to all, and to hold America absolutely neutral, and to love our neighbor from Austria, or Germany, or France, or England just as much as we do the man who came from our own part of the footstool. We cannot do this by an active propaganda for any of the European belligerents, and I hear a great deal of criticism on the part of Americans of purely American descent directed against those who are carrying their partisanship into this neutral nation. It hurts more than it does good.

TRULLINGER RECEIVER NAMED

W. W. Everhart, of Molalla, has been appointed by Circuit Judge Campbell receiver for the property of Homer Trullinger, whose affairs are involved. Mr. Trullinger mortgaged his farm on Milk Creek and purchased a lot and erected a hotel at Molalla, and the building was encumbered with many liens. It is expected that the receiver will prove beneficial to Trullinger who is represented by Attorney O. D. Eby.
