

Reservist No. 5678

This story, "Reservist No. 5678," was the first prize in the short story contest conducted by the Enterprise. Elbert Charman, the author of the story, is a graduate of the Oregon City high school and has spent the greater part of his life here. Mr. Charman has always taken an active part in school and church work. The story is unusually written and possesses many merits.

Together they strolled along the verdant bank. Lucien and Celeste. As they looked upon the scene unfolded to their view, the ball of fire sank slowly behind the western sky, leaving a rosy tinge to drive away the fast approaching twilight while it made a safe retreat. The beautiful Willamette had never looked so wonderful to them. This was their new-found home; this valley, this America. Their hopes and aspirations, their ambitions and ideals, all centered in the little five-acre farm which was the heritage of their unceasing toil. But now—

Lucien looked tenderly at her, and drew her close to him. He loved this little maid, dark eyed and demure; he had won her and worked for her; he had brought her to America, the land of the living chance, and now it would almost break his heart to part with her.

There was only one consideration which could ever have persuaded Lucien to leave Celeste. "Duty" was the first word in his vocabulary. For many tedious years he had served in the regular army in the land over the sea which had been his home; all his life he had been among soldiers, and inured in his very soul to that word, "duty." He was a reservist now, and when he had brought his wife to America he had never considered the possibility of returning to fight; but the land of his birth had become involved in the aerial catenium which had fallen upon the powers of Europe, and every reservist had been summoned to the colors.

They were sick at heart. The quarrel was nothing to Lucien; his neighbors were all of different nationalities in this new country where all races and peoples met in perfect parity, and it was absurd to think that he would go abroad to fight their countrymen. There was no spirit of antagonism, and yet, why did he owe allegiance to a foreign ruler? Why could he not forget the past and live in contentment in his new-found home-land?

Then to Lucien's mind flashed the vision of men in action, of booming guns and gleaming bayonets; charges and countercharges. There was his general with flashing sabre, there his gallant comrades! They were not shirking their duty.

Revolving in the mind of Celeste were the same perplexing and momentous problem, as slowly Lucien turned toward her, a question unspoken in his eyes, but nevertheless instantly understood: the reply to which meant almost life and death to both of them. Slowly the answer came.

"Go," she said simply and unhesitatingly, "you are bound to answer the call. You must start at once."

A half hour passed, and had you perchance strolled past this spot by the water's edge upon that early August evening, you could still have seen this same Lucien, a man strong by nature and strengthened by environment, sitting with his head buried in his hands, weeping like a child.

As for Celeste, she too, knew the meaning of war! This spot amidst the valley was their Arcadia—a Garden of the Hesperides to them—but with Lucien gone the magic scene would change to one of grim reality, and she would become but a lonely "foreigner," in a land thousands of miles away from her people.

Two days of preparation, a soldier's farewell, and the train at the nearby station chugged away from the platform. Faster and faster, as the speed of the train accelerated, the telegraph poles receded, and finally the man who occupied the rear platform, after straining his eyes for a last glimpse of the home he was leaving, stepped inside the car with a gesture of regret.

The short trip to Portland, the longer journey to New York, and the sea voyage on the Atlantic, when the vessel ran without lights by night, and crept fearfully forward during the day time, lest the ship of some hostile nation should discover it; these incidents were like a nightmare to Lucien as he thought of the one he had left behind.

A month intervened, days of monotonous toil in barracks and camp, before Lucien's regiment, recruited and equipped to a full war basis was suddenly ordered to the front. The press had been so strictly censored that even the soldiers did not know the situation at the battle point. Yet the activity of the officers, the sharp, severe training which the troops had undergone, to make them physically fit for the ordeal of war, and the frequent lengthy consultations of the general staff, had given strength to the rumor that the reserves would soon be called into action; that the war was one of gigantic proportions, a struggle of titanic forces, where every atom of strength must be hurled into the breach; every nerve, every sinew, every fibre of being strained to the utmost; where every man must be a soldier and each soldier unhesitatingly perform his duty.

The order to move came as a relief to the reserves. History was being made, and they must have a part in shaping it. Their first engagement was a skirmish in which only the advance guard figured, conducting themselves creditably and preventing a flanking movement by the enemy. Then they reached the trenches, and there Lucien saw humanity at its worst. Day after day, night after night, they watched and waited, firing and drawing the fire of their opponents, and never daring to raise their heads above the line where nothing human could endure.

Finally, when the weeks had turned into months, many of them, it seemed to Lucien, although in reality only one had passed, the order came to dislodge the enemy at all costs. The message flashed along the line, and amid the terrific detonations of the heavy artillery in their rear, a long line of bayonets glimmered and with a mighty cheer, the soldiers sprang from the trenches.

A hundred and fifty yards ahead lay the works of the enemy. Two yards they ran, before a hail of bullets met them, shot and shell that human being had invented, but which nothing human could withstand. The goal grew near—the line thinner. Over the bodies of fallen comrades—victims of the remorseless machine guns which were pumping a shower of missiles at them; over the defenses of the foe, struggling, fighting, dying, in their effort to conquer!

The hail of bullets ceased, and man against man, there by the trenches, they waged mortal combat for supremacy. Lucien's regiment was half annihilated, but the survivors fought like demonic beings; fought as only men transformed for the instant into supermen can fight. The issue was undecided, when dimly Lucien saw a little knot of combatants struggling over the flag of his regiment. The color-bearer fell and the hand of an enemy grasped the trophy. Then a tall, little figure plunged into the fray; a soldier fell, dispatched by the thrust of a bayonet, and the little form wrenched the precious emblem from the foe who held it.

The struggle centered around the flag. On every side the gallant reserver confronted hinging bayonets. Desperately and courageously he fought a losing battle against odds. Beaten to his knees, still he struggled, fought and died there; doing his duty.

The trenches of the enemy were captured that day, and praise of Lucien's regiment was on the lips of many, but every precious yard was won by the forfeiture of a brave man's life. For every yard they gained a home was broken; a human being sacrificed upon the altar of duty.

After the engagement they picked the little figure up. It was Lucien, and beneath him, his hand in death still gripped the blood-stained rag he had given his life to defend. A faithful comrade paused to drop a tear upon the trench which marked his place of burial, and when the enemy was forced to retire and the graves of his fallen mates were left behind, this friend took with him the only tangible evidence of Lucien which remained, a letter from Celeste, and Lucien's tag, bearing the number, 5678, taken from the dead body of a man of inherent bravery, who did his duty as he saw it, and hesitated not to make the supreme sacrifice for his cause.

The months had passed—four of them—long, weary months for Celeste. She had received a letter from Lucien postmarked New York, and one upon his arrival in Europe, that was all. Patiently she was waiting for a footstep at the door, a voice to cheer her; for him whom she loved; waiting alone in this valley of the Willamette, far away from her people.

As she waited, autumn robbed the trees of their foliage, all but the giant firs which stood in stately grandeur on the adjacent hillside; the heavy rains came and transformed the placid Willamette into a swirling, impetuous flood, rushing tumultuously over the jagged rocks which were projected from the opposite bank, and lending a weird attractiveness to the otherwise dreary scene.

One morning the little muddy cart of the rural carrier stopped at the gate, and the jovial postman wondered why Celeste grasped the envelope he handed her so eagerly, and then disappeared within, without a word to him. She noted that the address was written by a hand strange to her, as she quickly opened the envelope and expectantly withdrew the contents. But no word of love or cheer awaited her. The bit of soiled newspaper which served as a soldier's stationery, was covered with a scrawl which corresponded to that of the address on the envelope. Painstakingly she deciphered the crudely written message, and read:

"I send you your husband's tag. It happened on the 19th of October, in a bayonet charge. He died saving our flag."

That was all except the reservist tag which had fallen in her lap, bearing the number, 5678. As her brain comprehended, she convulsively grasped the arm of the chair, and wept inconsolably; her woman's heart was touched with a loss that to her was irreparable.

Two weeks later the little train whistled again at the nearby station, and started slowly down the valley, but this time a woman occupied the platform at the rear, strained her eyes until the receding scene faded in the distance, and clasped in her hand a little metal tag, in memoriam of reservist No. 5678.

Number 5678! And where, she wondered, were the tags which the other thousands of numbers represented? How many other homes had been disrupted, how many widows cherished a similar token? As she looked at the little tag, Celeste realized that Lucien had been but an infinitesimal part of a great machine; a giant machine constructed from human material and assembled by that monster mechanism—Militarism! He had been killed, snapped in the working of the huge machine, rendered useless as a part of it; now another human form supplied the missing place, and the great organization of war moved on again.

His part had been so trivial, his little struggle so unfruitful, his last noble sacrifice so barren of results! The world seemed full of heroes such as he, men who fought and died for their country; died by thousands and by the hundreds thousands.

Her reverie ended when the great transatlantic liner steamed past the statue of liberty toward the open ocean, and Celeste, with outstretched hands, made adieu to the land which she might have claimed for her own, and then resolutely turned toward the other shore. She was going back to her people.

MANY POINTS ON TURKISH COAST ARE BOMBARDED

ONLY TWO FORTS IN THE DARDANELLES REMAIN INTACT, SAYS REPORT.

40 GUNS IN FORTIFICATIONS ARE LOST AND THOUSANDS KILLED

Landing Parties of Allied Troops in Aspect Destroyed Defenses and Find Charred Bodies of Soldiers.

LONDON, March 4.—Bombardment by the Anglo-French fleet of Turkish coast points, which was begun with the attack on the Dardanelles, has spread to scattered points along practically the entire seaboard of the Ottoman empire.

The fleet this (Thursday) morning resumed its bombardment of the inner forts of the Dardanelles, according to a dispatch received by Reuters' Telegram company from its correspondent at Athens.

The text of the dispatch follows: "The bombardment of the inner forts of the Dardanelles was resumed Thursday morning. Ten warships took part in the operations. According to a British officer, only two of the Turkish forts remain intact."

"Allied landing parties found the charred remains of soldiers in the damaged forts, showing that the Turks had buried their dead before evacuating these positions."

The British admiral issued the following statement late tonight: "The attack on the fortresses in the Dardanelles continued yesterday (Wednesday). The admiral has not yet reported on the results obtained within the straits."

"Outside, the Dublin demolished an observation station on the Gallipoli Peninsula and the Sapphire bombarded guns and troops at various points in the Gulf of Adramytti."

"Six modern field guns at Fort H have been destroyed, bringing the total number of guns demolished up to 40."

"The French battleships bombarded the Buldur forts and wrecked the Kavak bridge."

"The French ministry of marine tonight issued the following communication: 'Methodical operations against the defenses of the Dardanelles continued March 3 despite an annoying north-east wind.'

"Numerous trawlers dragged the entire strait from its entrance to the south of Dardanelles on the European side almost opposite Dardania in order to permit the warships bombarding Khanak Kalesi to move about with security."

RUSSIANS REPULSED WITH HEAVY LOSSES

CZAR'S MEN ASSUME OFFENSIVE AT SEVERAL POINTS, DEFEATED IN SOME.

BERLIN, via London, March 8.—Russian night attacks at Novomilastu, 50 miles southwest of Warsaw, have been repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy, according to a statement issued today by the war office here. Fifteen hundred prisoners were taken and the enemy was driven back along the Pilica river, it was declared.

"The Russians," continued the statement, "have assumed the offensive at several points."

"Attacks by the enemy west of Augustow around Plock, in the Rawa river region and on the Przasnysz-Miwa road, have been repulsed."

"Aviators again have attacked German positions at Ostend, but no mention of damage was made in the dispatches received."

"Severe fighting is in progress in the Champagne district. French attacks between Souain and Meault were repulsed, as well as attacks in the Vosges and northwest of Mont-a-Mousson."

BELLEVEILLE, Kan., March 8.—Thirteen passengers were injured here today when a Rock Island train was derailed by striking a heavy snow bank. Miss Violet Holstite, of Lentz, Ore., was included in the number.

CHICAGO, March 8.—One good result of the European war to Mrs. U. S. Housewife came today when figures were made public showing that meats are two or three cents cheaper a pound now than they were one year ago.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Representative Hawley was named a member of the rural credits commission authorized to prepare a bill.

LONDON, March 6.—George Henry Cadogan, fifth earl of Cadogan, one of London's wealthiest landlords, died here today, aged 75 years. He was famous for his lavish entertainment of royalty.

WILSON DEMANDS CHANGE IN NOTE SENT CARRANZA

UNITED STATES DISPATCHES AN EMPHATIC MESSAGE TO MEXICAN LEADER.

AMERICAN WARSHIPS WILL BE RUSHED TO SOUTHERN PORTS

Delaware Is Ordered to Retain Post of Vera Cruz and Others in Atlantic Fleet Are on Way to Join Her.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—General Carranza has been informed in a note from the United States government that unless there is an improvement in conditions with respect to foreigners and their interests in Mexican territory under his control, such steps as may be necessary will be taken by the American government to obtain the desired protection.

The note is the strongest and most emphatic document that has been sent by the Washington government to Mexico since the correspondence with Huerta a year ago. Carranza is warned that the United States has viewed with deep concern the growing complaints by foreigners generally against his administration affairs and now in effect demands an early change.

The contents of the communication was revealed to several of the ambassadors and ministers here, who expressed satisfaction at its urgent language. Some regarded it as an entire change of policy toward Mexico on the part of the United States.

American Consul Sullivan should have presented the note to Carranza today. A copy of it was sent to the Brazilian minister at Mexico City to be shown to General Obregon, the Carranza commander.

In the meantime some movements of American warships have been ordered, the effect of which will be a naval demonstration such as it is hoped by some officials will convince General Carranza of the determination of the American government to obtain a change in conditions in Mexico City.

Secretary Daniels conferred with President Wilson tonight over the prospects of sending additional warships to Vera Cruz. Only one vessel, the battleship Delaware, has been at Vera Cruz for several weeks, but five warships will be in that vicinity in a few days. It has been planned to send the Delaware to Guantanamo soon to join the Atlantic fleet in its spring maneuvers.

As a result of the latest developments the Delaware will remain at Vera Cruz indefinitely; the cruiser Tacoma left Port au Prince, Hayti, today under orders to proceed at once to Vera Cruz; the gunboat Petrel already en route from Mobile, Ala., and the cruiser Des Moines is bound from Progreso to Vera Cruz, while the gunboat Sacramento is at Tampico.

JOSEPH LEITER GIVES JITHY OPINIONS ON WHEAT AND FARMERS

JOSEPH LEITER

NEW YORK, Mar. 8.—Joseph Leiter, millionaire grain speculator, who unsuccessfully tried to corner the wheat market in 1897 and 1898, was the principal witness at the attorney general's investigation into the increased cost of bread. Some of his pithy comments on the wheat situation follow: "Human nature is always looking for the last cent."

"The farmer is the greatest speculator of them all."

"Most of the men on the Chicago board of trade never have the slightest intention of buying actual wheat."

"Many people in the grain commission houses never saw a bushel of wheat in their lives."

"If you prohibit speculation the farmers will form a trust that will make the biggest trust in the country look puny."

"In running a wheat corner you lose so much in burying the corpse that it kills all the fun."

"The man in the bucket shop who buys for a few points' rise in the wheat market might as well put his money in a faro bank."

Mackburg correspondence, Aurora Observer, under date of February 25: "The last week of winter has been ushered in by a day of alternate rain and sunshine, giving no promise of the pessimistic prediction that another reign of icy cold stood ready to blight our prospect of an early spring. The meadow lark has a more cheering prognostic in his morning song, which is a strain that must lighten the heaviest heart, telling us that spring has already come."

CHARLES R. CRANE QUILTS ILLINOIS BECAUSE TAX LAWS HIT HIM HARD

CHARLES R. CRANE

CHICAGO, Mar. 4.—Charles R. Crane, one of the state's foremost business men, not unknown for his public works and charities, is quitting Illinois as a legal residence because of burdensome taxes. Mr. Crane feels that the tax laws impose too heavy a burden on him simply because he is wealthy. He will move elsewhere. His action because of his prominence has caused a stir here and in other states where tax law changes have placed heavy imposts on the rich. In certain circles his action is upheld, while by another class of people he is considered simply to be unwilling to bear his just proportion of taxes.

BIG HOP CROP IN OREGON IS LIKELY

ROOTS HAVE WINTERED EXCEPTIONALLY WELL, SAY SALEM AUTHORITIES

MARKET IS REPORTED VERY STRONG

Hal B. Bolam, Leading Dealer in Capital City, is Pleased With Outlook in This State For 1915.

SALEM, Ore., Mar. 4.—According to reports received by Hal B. Bolam, hop merchant, local, as well as those received at headquarters of the hop growers' association the hop roots of the Willamette valley have wintered in excellent condition and the indications are at the present time for an increased and unusually fine crop of hops for the coming season.

Owing to the badly confused records regarding acreage in Oregon it is impossible to give an accurate estimate of hops in this state at the present time but Mr. Bolam places it at about 25,000 acres, with a possible variation of 1,000 more or less. At present there are not to exceed 2200 bales of 1914 hops in growers hands in Oregon, the dealers having been sold out for a long time, and there are not more than 900 bales of olds, of 1913's, in first or dealers' hands in this state.

The unsettled conditions in Europe indicate that there will be short crop on the other side of the Atlantic this year, principally due to the inability to cultivate the crop under war conditions, and the quality of the foreign crop will consequently not be up to the usual standard. This will be a strong item in favor of the American product and serves to bear out the indications of an increase rather than a decrease in the Pacific coast acreage, which was predicted and strongly indicated under the market conditions which prevailed during the fall and winter.

There were some hops plowed up last fall but none were plowed up this spring of any consequence, and owing to the increased demand and consequent increased strength in the market, it is believed that many of the yards which were not cultivated last year will be taken care of this year which will account for a considerable increase in the yield for this state. It is conceded that the brewers have some hops put away in cold storage, which will necessarily enter as a strong factor in the regulation of prices this fall and probably produce panicky conditions in the market, as is usual, but the exact extent of brewers' holdings is not definitely known at this time.

MARKET FOR SPOT HOPS FIRM IN STATE

PORTLAND, Ore., Mar. 4.—Market for spot hops is very firm at 15c a pound for selected quality, and further offers and sales have been reported at the recently established high mark. Joseph Harris of Salem has purchased the Luther crop of 68 bales at Albany at the high point. Further sales are reported at the same price, but they cannot be fully confirmed.

While buying interests are keeping secret the destination of these high priced sales, the general trade is still inclined to the belief that all of it is for England.

Market for contracts is also firmer at 13c a pound for general offerings, with a fractional advance said to have been offered for big crops of first class yards. Little contracting has been confirmed recently, because of the firmer ideas entertained by growers, but some business is said to be passing quietly.

Spot market is fairly active all along the coast, and some recent business has been confirmed both in Washington and California districts.

State architects office and salary of $4500 abolished and official put on fees.

THAW BEGINS NEW EFFORT IN COURT TO GAIN LIBERTY

TRIAL FOR CONSPIRACY REVEALS PLAN OF SLAYER OF WHITE.

ILLEGAL DETENTION AT TIME OF FLIGHT, DEFENSE'S STAND

State is Firm in Desire to Return Prisoner to Mattewan and is Willing to Place 50 Witnesses on Stand.

NEW YORK, March 8.—In the room where he twice faced a jury for the murder of Stanford White, Harry Kendall Thaw went on trial today for conspiring to escape from the State Hospital for the criminal insane at Mattewan. With him, as co-defendants, were five men, who, the state charges, were parties to the alleged conspiracy. The entire day was required to complete the jury. Taking of testimony will begin tomorrow.

From the outset it was evident that the trial would be another fight on Thaw's part to gain his freedom. His attorneys plainly intimated that they intended to try to prove their client was sane when he escaped from the asylum. Such being the case, they said in examining witnesses, the defendant was being illegally detained at the time of his flight.

They asked prospective jurors whether they would be prejudiced against a man, who, providing he was of sound mind, used any means at his command to escape from a hospital for the insane.

John R. Stanchfield, Thaw's chief counsel, said later a writ of habeas corpus would be demanded if Thaw were acquitted on the ground that his detention would be illegal because the jury, Mr. Stanchfield said, would have established his client's sanity by their verdict. The lawyer would not say what he would do if Thaw were found guilty. The contention of the state, as outlined in questioning witnesses, is that Thaw, although insane at the time of his escape, was nevertheless competent to enter into a conspiracy and that therefore he should be punished accordingly.

Deputy Attorney-General Kennedy, in charge of the prosecution, said Thaw would be immediately returned to Mattewan if found guilty. The state, he said, was prepared if necessary to place 50 witnesses on the stand to prove its case.

GOVERNOR SPRY OF UTAH STARTS PROBE OF INDIAN UPRISING

GOV. WILLIAM SPRY

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Mar. 4.—Governor William Spry has begun an investigation of the Indian uprising at Bluff. While the matter comes immediately under the supervision of the federal authorities, the governor is interested in protecting the lives of the cowboys, and the killing of Joe Akers by the Putes will be the subject of an inquiry.

CROUP

Rendered Harmless by Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It Masters this Terror of Childhood.

(Of course it never puts to bed that loud, hoarse, croupy noise. You know the little throat bell click up and the gasping, straining fight for breath must be helped at once.)

"Oh, but that Foley's Honey and Tar is a wonderful thing for croup. Thank Heaven I had it on hand."

Foley's Honey and Tar Compound spreads a healing, soothing coating as it glides down the throat. It cuts away and cures out the choking mucus that blocks the windpipe and tickles. No more hoarse, rattling coughs, no gasping, straining fight for breath, but peaceful breathing and quiet rest.

MRS. J. N. HILL, House, Ga., writes: "I had Foley's Honey and Tar never fail to cure our croupy and hoarse, and croupy croup. I can not say too much for it."

HAROLD HERR, Mass., Mich., writes: "We give Foley's Honey and Tar to our children for croup and it always acts quickly."

A good druggist is glad to sell Foley's Honey and Tar Compound because it is the best medicine for croup, whooping, throat and lung affections that money can buy, and contains no opiates. In 25c, 50c, $1.00 sizes.

FAMINE IN MEXICO CITY IS REPORTED

SUFFERING IS OFFICIALLY CONFIRMED—TRAIN SERVICE IS SUSPENDED.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Official reports to the United States government through its own and other diplomatic representatives describe an intolerable condition of affairs in Mexico City, where the populace is suffering the effects of famine and lack of communication with the outside world.

One of the official reports charges that General Obregon, the Carranza commander, is inciting the people to loot and take the law into their own hands to obtain food in order to force a large part of the male population into the Carranza army. This view of the situation is credited by some government officials here, because of Obregon's efforts to block a relief movement begun by an international committee.

This committee, in a communication of some length to the United States government, recites the difficulties of the situation and on the basis of it a strong protest has been sent to General Carranza. It is as yet unanswered.

All train service with Mexico City by way of Vera Cruz except for military purposes has been suspended, as has also telegraphic communication with the exception of official dispatches.

RUN OF HOGS AT THE STOCK YARDS LIGHT

The receipts for the week at the Portland Union Stock Yards Co. have been: Cattle 956, calves 25, hogs 2885, sheep 4496.

A fair run in the cattle division the first part of the week. Some good pulp fed steers sold at $7.50, a nickel more than paid for same quality the previous week. The market can be considered steady although the prices were a little better than paid a week ago. Good cows sell at $6.60; bulls at $6.00 and calves at $5.50.

There was a light run in the hog division this week. Prices have jumped from $6.50 to $7.15 in the last few days. Many pigs and heavy hogs are still coming in. Tops are quoted at $7.15 at close of the week.

Sheep house transactions were made quickly. The demand for mutton being so good that buyers bid $7.50 for wethers and $6.50 for ewes. Lamb market steady at $8.50. There has been quite a number of sheep coming in this week.

The following sales are representative:

52 steers	1171	$7.50
50 steers	1162	7.50
23 steers	1381	13.81
127 steers	1022	7.15
2 bulls	1471	6.25
2 bulls	1651	6.00
7 heifers	924	6.35
6 calves	241	8.50
24 cows	1154	6.90
7 cows	1121	6.40
6 cows	1145	6.15
3 cows	1195	5.75
212 hogs	186	7.15
196 hogs	215	7.10
1168 hogs	211	7.00
69 hogs	201	6.95
413 lambs	76	8.50
11 lambs	119	8.40
35 wethers	105	7.50
30 ewes	103	6.50

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 4.—The state senate today defeated a bill, recently passed by the house, to submit woman's suffrage amendment to the voters.

FEEL BLUE—OR JUST STUPID?

Sluggish bowels and torpid liver usually go together and it does not take long for constipation to produce a bad condition—a feeling of languor or listlessness—the "blues," headache, palpitation or other malady. Indeed, when in this condition the system invites more serious illness and is not able to throw off disease. Foley Cathartic Tablets are a wholesome laxative and cleansing cathartic. They act without inconvenience, griping or sickening.
