

NATIONAL PARTY WOULD HOLD BALANCE OF POWER

The new national party organized at Chicago recently, intends to "hold the balance of power in congress" in 1918. This was the declaration of John Spargo of Bennington, Vt., vice chairman of the convention just closed at Chicago.

"We do not plan, at present, to place a candidate for president in the field," said Spargo. "That is too far away. We do plan, however, to launch a nationwide campaign to have a strong representation in the 1918 congress. I am confident we will hold the balance of power."

A group of chairmen of the five groups represented in the new party—socialists, progressives, prohibitionists, single-taxers and independentists—met to select a national committee of 20 members. The committee will establish state executive committees in each state to aid in the organization of the party. This work is expected to start within 30 days.

The national committee will also select a date and place for the proposed 1918 convention. Chicago and St. Louis are mentioned as the probable site. The platform adopted declares for:

Woman suffrage, national prohibition, single taxation, government ownership of public utilities, labor reforms, abolition of secret diplomacy, freedom of the seas, extermination of "prohibitory or discriminatory tariffs or taxes" and creation of an international union to enforce peace.

The platform advocates "immediate adoption of the Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment." Adoption of the initiative, referendum and recall by city, state and national governments. An "executive budget"—a schedule of proposed expenditures prepared annually in advance by administrative officers and submitted to congress for discussion and modification. A plan for "proportional representation" whereby congressmen and state legislators shall be elected at large from the state as a whole, or from districts electing several members each. An "absentee voter" plan. Amendment of the constitution through a majority vote of the people. Freedom of speech and press, under certain restrictions; prison reform; seats in congress for cabinet members, but without vote; extension of the postal savings system; shortening of the legal work day; government insurance for workers against sickness, injury or death; federal child labor laws and federal employment bureaus.

TALES OF MEN OF NORTHERN LANDS

younger of the boys was taken suddenly ill with a sickness quite common in winter mining camps—terrible pains in the back and a great weakness.

They came to a deserted prospector's cabin and put up, and the daily diary found in the spring told the terrible story. For days and days Wheeler stayed with his partner in the hope that he would recover and they could go on, and then starvation started them in the face, and something must be done. So it was decided the handful of provisions should be divided and Wheeler should start for help.

Fifteen miles ahead three Indian families lived, and it could have been reached in a day, but whether the man did not know this, or whether he was dazed with hunger, will never be known, for he started back down the river on the back track.

In the spring the Indians found the dead body of the sick man and notified the fort. Men went out and found the diary left by the dead man. Nearly every day for five weeks a few lines were written. Then the time of separation was recorded. After that there was only one legible word, "starving," although there were other scrawls on the page that were unintelligible.

Days later the bones of Wheeler were found, picked clean of flesh by the bears, about 80 miles down the river, and undoubtedly he starved to death.

Such are the tragedies of the grim North Land, that has no pity and plays no favorites.

I went out, stood on a knoll and looked at the great stretch of land to the north, and I could not help but think that gold was Alaska's curse.

While waiting for the sun to set near midnight, I walked up the river front to the mission. It was open, but empty. It was a pretty little church, built of logs and the fixtures were neat and clean. On a stand were two Bibles, translated into the Siwash dialect. At an Indian cabin near by was a young woman and a tot of Siwash, about four years old. I stopped and shook hands with the little Indian, when his mother went inside and brought out a book which she showed to me. I took it to be the New Testament, but as it was in the Indian types I could not tell, and I could not make out why she was so anxious for me to see it.

Two motion picture men, representing the Burton Holmes travel pictures, came down on the boat from Dawson. They had planned to get the midnight sun, but two delays, one a full week in Dawson, had spoiled their schedule, so they were going to make the best of it and get what they could. "Who on the outside will ever know whether it is a midnight or eleven o'clock sun?" he asked me.

About ten o'clock it began to cloud up and the operator was frantic. He walked up and down the river front cursing. "Good God, if I don't get it now I will have to stay here until the next boat," he wailed. I never saw a more frantic man. He said his orders were to get the midnight sun, and he had simply "GOT to get it." "Any sun will do, but I have got to get it before the boat leaves," he exclaimed, and then he would tear up and down the one street, looking at the clouds.

I went on the boat and read for an hour, then came ashore. And just then the clouds lifted and showed a beautiful sunrise, or sunset, for a few minutes—I have never been able to determine which, as the clouds soon obscured the orb.

The moving picture man was in ecstasy. He set up his camera and reeled it off, getting a range so that it embraced the weird surroundings, the frontier log town and the Indians. He declared the pictures would be "great stuff." "I came here clear from the South Sea islands to get that picture," he exclaimed to me. He went down the river to Tanana, where he met a boat going up, and at once started back on his course, 2000 miles to Seattle, against an upstream current where boats average five miles an hour.

And I concluded there wasn't much choice between the life of a gold prospector and a motion picture man, and that each was entitled to a lot of kind thoughts.

One gets a lot of new ideas and has plenty of time to cash them on a trip down the Yukon. Day after day you sit there, reading, resting and thinking, and thoughts will come into your head that never came there before. It seems to me he is an entirely different person than he who bought a ticket in Seattle ten or twelve days before, and that he will find his former self waiting when he gets back.

No night is what got me. I couldn't find the place to sleep. Only by my watch could I tell when I should go to bed and get up, and it didn't seem as if the ticks had a right to dispute nature. There was no darkness, scarcely a tinge of twilight, and such kind of things simply upset the habit schedule of years and made me feel as if I was in wrong in a wrong country.

My state room was directly over the steamer's engines, and a hot enough crib for an Arctic midwinter. When the wind was quiet the mosquitoes came aboard in swarms, and the only thing to do was to hunt my bunk, close it tight, and stifle and sweat. I was kicking on these conditions to a fellow passenger the next day, and the consolation I got was, "Wait 'till we get down on the lower river where the insects weigh a pound!"

I asked the captain when we would reach Rampart, and he said he thought we would get there in the night. Then I told the waiter to be sure and call me, for it was in Rampart Rex Beach wrote "The Barrier" and I wanted to look the camp over and see from where he got his inspiration.

A few miles out of the Fort the Yukon turned to the south and we again crossed the Arctic Circle, and it was with genuine relief that I left the great silent wastes of the north and started on the down river. But if I had known the program the fate framed up, I would surely have stayed at Fort Yukon and taken the first steamer on the back track.

But I didn't know.

PROPOSE THE NATIONAL MANUFACTURE OF PAPER

A report recommending government operation of the print paper and pulp industries during the war and arraigning what it calls the defiant attitude of print paper producers, was filed at Washington on Saturday by the Senate printing committee. It will wait action at the December session of congress.

The report says the federal trade commission's findings "show beyond any question that the print paper industry, in its desire for excessive profits, had imposed a most unjust burden on the American press, which faces a serious disaster if relief cannot speedily be had from the oppressive prices now exacted for print paper."

It adds that the commission, in its recent investigation, exhausted every resource at its command to obtain relief for the publishers, but has been able to get only a small measure of relief, owing to the defiant attitude assumed by the present producers of print paper and lack of authority of the commission to enforce its findings as to fair and reasonable price."

Under a resolution introduced by Senator Smith of Arizona, and reported by the committee for passage, the trade commission would be empowered to control the production and distribution of print paper and mechanical and chemical pulp in the United States. All print and pulp mills and agencies will be operated on government account and their products pooled in the commission's hands during the war emergency and equitably distributed at a price based on production and distribution cost, plus a fair profit per ton.

Provision is made in the resolution for co-operation with the Canadian government and for limiting imports into the United States during the war to shipments for government account.

The committee report points out that as a result of the commission investigations seven leading news print manufacturers have been indicted for violating the Sherman anti-trust law, and the commission has entered formal complaint against the book paper manufacturers' bureau of statistics and 23 member companies of that bureau, but that up to this time neither the indictments nor the complaints have afforded any measure of protection to the publishers.

Most of the newspapers of the country, the report says, are now up to the point where they must soon renew contracts, and if adequate relief is to be had it must be without waiting for the prosecution of the indictments and complaint.

"The committee," it concludes, "submits to the senate whether it is better to safeguard the continuance of a free press in this country by assuring it an adequate supply of print paper at a fair and reasonable price, or whether to permit a further increase in the excessive profits of the paper industry, which the federal trade commission declares is about to exact $17,500,000 more in excessive profits from the American publishers who are loyally and patriotically supporting their government in this fateful hour."

CHRISTMAS MAIL

Postmaster Cooke Gives Statement from Postmaster General

Recognizing the unusual significance of the coming Christmastide to our military, naval and civilian forces abroad, who will undoubtedly be the recipients of numerous gifts from friends and relatives at home, the post office department, with the cooperation of other governmental departments interested in the welfare and comfort of the men on foreign soil, has made special arrangements to effect timely delivery of all "Christmas" parcels addressed to the American expeditionary forces overseas.

In order that the department may realize its cherished purpose to place in the hands of the absent ones these tokens of friendship and esteem on Christmas morning patrons of the postal service are requested to faithfully comply with the simple postal requirements outlined hereafter. Without the hearty cooperation of mailers this extraordinary service cannot be adequately performed.

Owing to the unusual distance this mail must be transported, the handling and the storage it must undergo, it is absolutely necessary that all parcels be covered with wrappers of sufficient strength not only to resist pressure of other mail continued in the sacks in which it will be inclosed, but to withstand the weight of other sacks of mail, which in the long transit may be piled thereon. Furthermore, owing to the fact that the contents of each parcel must be scrutinized before leaving the United States, to obviate delay, due to censorship, the covering thereof should be secured as to admit of ready inspection of the contents of the parcel.

Many combination packages will probably be made up, including miscellaneous toilet articles, candies, soaps, etc. The contents of such packages should be tightly bound, in order that the several articles may not be loosened in transit, damaging the parcel itself or causing damage to the covering of the parcel. Soldiers' Christmas boxes should be inclosed in substantial containers. Candies in thin baseboard boxes should be inclosed in wood, tin, or corrugated pasteboard.

Parcels must be fully, correctly and legibly addressed and conspicuously marked "CHRISTMAS MAIL." The addressee's company, regiment or other organization, followed by the words "American Expeditionary Forces," should appear on the address.

The rate of postage on parcels of printed books weighing 8 ounces or less is 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof. Parcels of books weighing more than 8 ounces are subject to the parcel post rate of 12 cents per pound or fraction.

Parcels containing perishable matter should be withheld from the mails unless it is absolutely certain that the contents will not deteriorate within six weeks from the date of mailing.

Mail all packages by November 5, address fully, wrap securely.

ADAMS SALE GOES ON

Big Store Brings Prices to Low Level in Closing Out Stock

It seems that the stock of the Adams department store is inexhaustible, for in spite of the great rush of bargain buyers during the last few weeks the big sale continues to attract multitudes. Thousands of Clackamas county people have bought over the counters since Mr. Adams announced his retirement from the active business field some weeks ago, and still there is a fine display of good merchandise to select from on the shelves and counters of the big store.

The sale is drawing to a close, however, and will be continued only long enough to satisfy Mr. Adams that the people of the county have taken advantage of the bargains he is able to make on his stock to dispose of it promptly. The store rooms have been rented over his head and goods are being prepared for the final rush preparatory to locking the doors to trade and urging workmen loose upon a renovation of the interior.

COUNTIES GET TAX

Government Pays O. & C. Grant Land Assessments in State

Payment of the accrued taxes and penalties upon the Oregon & California grant lands, amounting to approximately $1,500,000, was received from the treasurer of the United States Tuesday morning by Oswald West. The 19 warrants will be delivered to 18 Oregon counties, and one to Clark county, Washington.

The taxes are to be paid upon the grant lands remaining unsold. With regard to contract lands, the settlement of taxes due is reserved until the question of legal title and the status of tax liability shall have been determined by the government.

Douglas county, which receives the largest warrant, will get $300,000. The smallest warrant is drawn in favor of Clark county.

CONSERVATION MEET

Mr. Plummer is Missionary from Food Administration Office

To discuss food conservation plans in Clackamas county a meeting will be held in Oregon City on October 20 as a result of the work done here Thursday by O. M. Plummer, field agent for the conservation forces of the state. With County Judge H. S. Anderson as chairman, an executive committee comprising J. E. Calavan, school superintendent; Mrs. Rosina Fouts Evans and Mrs. James M. Cary, has been appointed to have charge of the meeting and consequent activity. Schools, churches, lodges and clubs will participate in the meeting, which is planned for October 20.

FAIR EARNS $19,000

LEA MAY GO TO TEXAS

In round numbers the earnings of the 56th annual Oregon state fair, which was held at Salem recently, total $19,000 in cash, according to figures compiled by A. H. Lea, secretary of the state fair board. Last year the earnings of the fair aggregated in round numbers $9000, and combined the earning of the last two fairs are greater than the earnings of all the 54 previous fairs, according to the secretary.

The receipts this year from all sources totaled $62,579.25. After the deduction of all expenses there is left in round numbers $19,000. Fully $1000 of the earnings of the fair were used during fair week to purchase hose, ticket-selling machines and other equipment, so that really the earnings of the fair totaled $20,000.

The Oregon fair is now regarded as the biggest and the best in the west, and with the view of making it even bigger and better next year, the board is considering sending Secretary Lea to the Texas state fair, to be held in Dallas. This fair is the greatest in the United States, and the board is inclined to believe that it would prove beneficial to Oregon to have the secretary make a study of it. Should he decide to visit the Texas fair, he will leave the last of the week.

A BUSINESS CHAT

You might build, with sufficient capital, the greatest store in the world; you might churn the best pound of butter that ever crossed the grocer's counter; you might stock your warehouse with the most pure, the most delicious line of edibles that science and common sense could create—but if you don't advertise them they'll decay and spoil on your shelves.

You would be like the tumble bug, which, the naturalist tells us, is larger when it is born than at any other time in its life. People can't patronize your great store, they can't eat your fine butter and they can't carry home baskets full of your delicious edibles unless you advertise them—and they cannot know that you sell them unless you advertise them.

There is not in all the world quite so powerful a magnet for the merchant, large or small, as printer's ink. And when that printer's ink is applied in a business-like fashion—THE COURIER fashion—to well-written, readable advertising, you can't keep trade away from your store.

WILBUR AIDES FINED

UNDER DRY STATUTES

Tommy Nishioka and Louis Rosenfeld, former employees of Julius Wilbur at the Friars club, and involved with him in the recent raid on the Claremont tavern near Portland, on Saturday pleaded guilty to violation of the prohibition laws and were fined $100 each by Judge Campbell. The trial hinged on an indictment drawn at the same time with that under which Wilbur was convicted last spring when he was fined $350 and sentenced to six months in jail. Nishioka and Rosenfeld were witnesses for Wilbur at his trial and testified strongly that no intoxicants had been handled at the club to their knowledge. It was proved, however, that the Japanese mixed the drinks and Rosenfeld delivered them to the tables with a full knowledge of what each was doing.

The charge upon which the two were tried also involved Wilbur, but because he has been convicted and is awaiting action on a motion to appeal his case to the United States supreme court, he was not tried again on Saturday.

FIREMEN BANQUET

Department Needs Members. Board Meets to Make Plans

Four of the six fire companies in Oregon City have voted to hold a department banquet in the near future and the other two units have promised to take similar action at their next meetings. The plan is a part of the department's campaign to increase its membership, and at a meeting to be held Wednesday evening the city fire board arranged additional means of filling up the ranks. The fire board comprises Mayor E. C. Hackett, John W. Loder, J. J. Tobin, Isom C. Bridges, A. D. Buckles, Dan Nolin, Milton Noble and Ralph Green.

Two Women Say Husbands Deserted and Failed to Support Them

Similar charges against errant husbands were filed in the circuit court here yesterday by Mrs. Nellie Michelson and Mrs. Elsa White. Mrs. Michelson says her husband, M. L. Michelson, to whom she was married at Eugene on December 25, 1915, deserted her and also failed to support her. She asks for the restoration of her maiden name, Nellie Tibbetts.

Mrs. White makes the same charges against her husband, Harry A. White, to whom she was married at Butte, Mont., on February 10, 1905.
