ANOTHER NORMAL

Pendleton wants a normal school. Weston, in the same county, doesn't care to see Pendleton's aspirations succeed. Weston seems to have good ground upon which to base her arguments against the creation of a school at the Round-Up city.

Last November the voters refused to be taxed for the support of a normal at Weston or at Ashland, where buildings and equipment are ready for occupancy.

To many it does look like rather foolish business to build a new normal school at Pendleton after so recently refusing to occupy the buildings already erected at Weston or Ashland. Weston would serve the same territory at Pendleton; it would draw the same students and, withal, Pendleton's plan seems to be idle and somewhat impossible of endorsement by the people. The Western Leader, regarding the normal school problem, says:

"Any one of three good reasons ought to be sufficient to defeat Pendleton's normal school aspirations, unless it succeeds in beguiling the voters.

"Pendleton is misusing the initiative privilege in a manner contemptuous of the plain mandate of the sovreign Oregon people. Two years ago the voters declared unmistakably that they did not want either one or two additional normal schools. They should be allowed a decent and reasonable interval in which to change their minds before being pestered with a demand for more normals. To ask them to build a $125,000 plant in Eastern Oregon within two years after they have voted not to restore to state use a $75,000 plant, falls but little short of pure insolence.

"Pendleton is evasive and cowardly, in that it makes its covert fight from ambush behind the skirts of the Oregon Agricultural College and the University of Oregon. It seeks unecessarily to "validate" these two already recognized and established institutions in the bill proposing to create the Pendleton Normal. Afraid to risk the straighforward piracy of scuttling the Western Normal in order to acquire for itself a big slice of state pork, it tries to hoodwink the voters into fearing that the agricultural college and the university may some time be spirited away by a constitutional goblin. Its deceptive bill, as pointed out by Mr. S. D. Allen of Eugene, constitutes "log rolling" of the worst variety.

"Pendleton's duplicity toward a smaller neighbor in the same county that has always been its loyal tributary, throws too much doubt upon its moral and ethical standards to make of it a suitable place for a state school. It is such brazen effrontery that the Pendleton newspapers applaud and one of them describes as 'righteousness,' forsooth!

"Here are three conspicuous reasons we say, why Pendleton deserves an admonitory squelching from Old Man Oregon. A fourth is that it already has the Eastern Oregon State Hospital and should be satisfied. There are others, but for our present purpose these will suffice."

THE PROSECUTOR

The city prosecutor is a martyr to the cause of civic government. It is some time since Mr. Schuebel was selected as prosecutor, an office more commonly designated as the city attorneyship, and his selection confirmed by a majority vote of the members of the city council.

For his presence and service as legal adviser to the aldermen the prosecutor is paid at the flattering rate of $75 a month.

Apparently the confirmation of his appointment brought to an abrupt end about 60 per cent of the duties he was delegated to carry out as city attorney. Yet this gentleman has not asked that the council stop the monthly donation from the taxpayers to the support of the figure-head official. It is a fact that he calls round regularly each month to receive $75 of the money of the taxpayers.

Since April 4 of this year the council has held fifteen executive sessions. The prosecutor attended the meeting held on that date. He has also attended five other meetings during the period between April 4 and July 20, the date of the last meeting.

Nine meetings have been held in the council chambers for the transaction of municipal business at which Mr. Schuebel has been very conspicuous by his total absence. It is, therefore, reasonable to conclude that not more than forty per cent of the business meetings of the city fathers attract the attention of the worthy prosecutor.

For non-attendance at the last meeting the attorney is to be excused for he was ill at that time. Illness will not account for the other eight meetings from which he has been absent.

Some time ago Mr. Schuebel was chairman of a committee that was expected to report to the council. Another member of the committee read the report and spiced it by saying that the city attorney was engaged in a game of billiards and could not "break away" to attend the meeting. Thus the prosecutor was guilty of a double neglect in that he did not appear as an official or as a member of the committee. Mr. Prosecutor did arrive at this meeting near the end of the session.

So long as the city attorney enjoys his billiards and manages to draw his salary regularly without attending more than 40 per cent of the meetings which it is his duty to attend the taxpayers should be satisfied. Seventy-five dollar checks grow on the bramble bushes along the river hereabouts and it is a trifling matter to rush out and pluck one at the end of each month for the faithful performance of the duties expected of the city attorney.

THE FACTS IN THE CASE

The coloring of political dishonesty which is fixed in many political debates has been particularly in evidence in Mr. Roosevelt's discussions of the foreign policies of the administration. Mr. Roosevelt seems to be so utterly carried away by animosity toward the democracy and its leader that he has permitted himself time and time again to be misled into a disregard of facts in launching his attacks. It is possible that the high point of conscious political misrepresentation in this campaign was reached by Mr. Roosevelt in his article in the Metropolitan Magazine this month when he said:

"As the administration has debated the sinking of the Lusitania for over a year without achieving any result or coming to any conclusion * *"

It is a saddening exhibition of the facility with which an ex-President disregards the responsibilities of his utterances in order to promote personal animosities and political ambitions, saddening because the facts are so plainly written where every man may read. The facts are, as the hearts of American mothers recorded joyously, that on May 30 last the German government announced its acceptance of the demand of the government of the United States that its unlawful submarine operations be discontinued and that in the intervening months there has been no instance of the torpedoing of a merchant vessel bearing American passengers.

Both "result" and "conclusion" are represented in that statement. Germany, at the express demand of the United States, has agreed upon a permanent abatement of her submarine outrages. The Imperial Government has lived up to its promise. The days that pass without extra editions of the newspapers telling of merchant ships being sent to the bottom with their human cargo are unmarred by a threat of war being necessary in order to maintain the right of Americans to unmolested travel on the high seas. They are days of peace with a continuing certainty that pease is not to be disturbed by a reopening of the submarine controversy.

Col. Roosevelt has harped so long upon his disapproval of the President's failure to go to war when the Lusitania was sunk, that he is now incapable of measuring his utterances on the President's policy evolved to meet the Lusitania crisis. Can he not realize that at the end this policy of the President's succeeded, that finally in the May note from Germany the President's wish to preserve the peace and honor of the nation without impairing either was given assurance of success? Americans are free to come and go upon the high seas, safeguarded by the protection which their government has thrown upon around them. Each day of peace in which they retain this freedom is a vital and living answer to the assertion that the policy by which it was established has had no result nor conclusion.

WHY CHARITY?

The Eugene Guard says: The noblest thing a citizen of the state of Oregon can do is to serve his country, whether it be in actual warfare or patroling the Mexican border to prevent the massacre of people or the destruction of property. A private concern which would employ guards to protect its property or employes, who are units in its organization, would expect to pay such guards a wage sufficient to provide for their families or other persons dependent upon them. The federal government ordered the militia from this state and other states to the border, married men included, giving little thought to the dependents who might be left in need and who, but for assistance from other sources, would be called upon to sacrifice the comforts of home, while husband and father performed a patriotic service for the nation.

Congress has in a small way since made some provision to aid the families of dependents and has adopted a resolution which permits guardsmen having dependents to return to their homes under certain conditions. In time of actual war, the services of every man would be needed and such a ruling would not be possible. The call of country would be first. Every other consideration, so far as the man in the ranks is concerned, would be swept aside. Either married men, or those with dependents, should be barred from enlistment in the national guard, or some provision should be made by state or federal government to care for those whom they supply with the comforts of home and the necessities of life.

Proposals to aid the men who are serving on the Mexican border and members of their families through a system of organized charity is little less than an insult. It manifests a spirit in those persons who are engaged in such movements worthy of commendation, but so far as the state and union are concerned it amounts to disgrace. Men who are willing to give their lives to the nation, that it may endure, should have first claim on the public treasury and should be no need for charity.

THE HOOSIER POET

James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, sang songs of sunshine. He sang so many of them and so well during his long and pleasant life that he passed away late last week as one of America's greatest poets and one of the very few upon whom the laurels of appreciation have rested before he himself was covered in a grave of glory.

The sunshine in the heart of James Whitcomb Riley has been one of the things that helped others to live. It certainly cheered a multitude of the Hoosier poet's lovers and that multitude includes practically every man, woman and child who can read. His books have been numerous and his subjects selected to interest readers in every clime and station. How well Riley deserved honor as the foremost poet of this great nation can be told by any of the millions who loved him.

Riley's life was eventful. He spurned the career outlined by his father. He took up sign painting in an itinerant fashion and later found a haven for his efforts in the office of a country newspaper. He was graduated to a metropolitan paper and with a general appreciation of his worth as a poet began to amass the fortune which, contrary to the opinion of the man one gets from reading his verse, he never shared with a wife. He lived and died a bachelor, yet always with a love in his big heart for home life and for the little folks who make home a pleasure and a blessing.

A wonderful pen is dried. A noble heart is stilled. The world has lost a lover and humanity has lost a friend. A familiar light in the windows of a house on Lockerbie street has been extinguished and the shades have been drawn, even as have the shades of the life of the man who lived there.

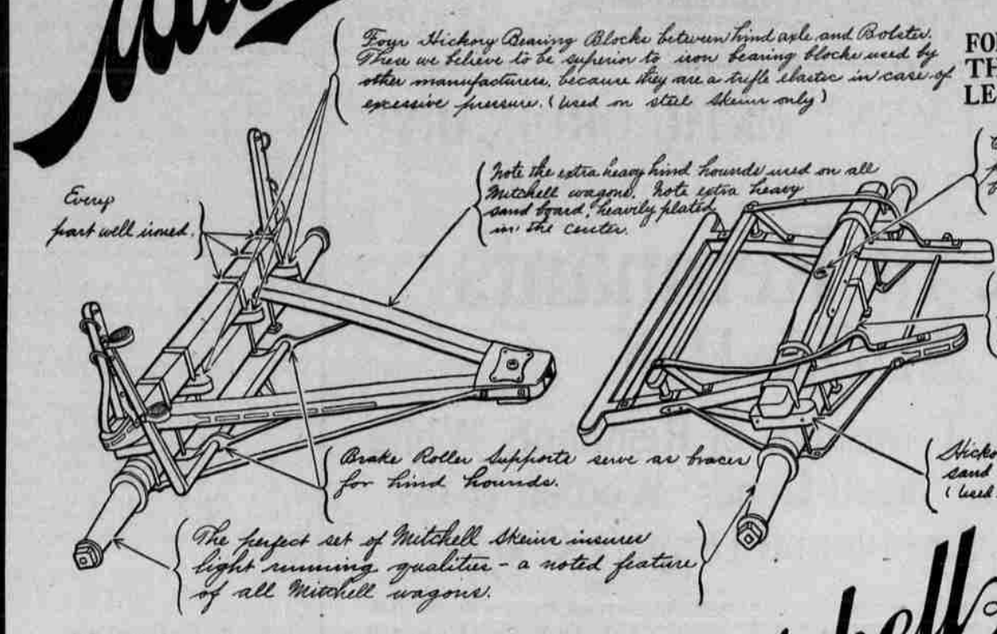

Riley's work lives on in the many books he has published. The man will live for many, many years in the pleasant memories of his millions of friends. But, will the world read again such a story as "Little Orphant Annie," or "That Old Sweetheart of Mine?"

Verses from the heart seem to come less abundantly with each succeeding year and since the illness of Mr. Riley, which caused a cessation in his poetic work a few years ago, the lack of the Riley style has been felt and the feeling has been one of pain.

Preparing for Round Up

With conditions practically insuring an attendance at Pendleton in excess of the great crowds of 1912 and 1913 when 75,000 people witnessed the exhibition the board of directors has dated the seventh Annual Round-Up for September 21, 22 and 23, and made preparation for increased seating capacity in the bleachers and the greatest exhibition ever staged. The railroads have increased the territory included in the Round-Up special rates so that this year they will extend as far east as Salt Lake on the Union Pacific; Missoula, Mont., on the Northern Pacific and south to San Francisco and north to British Columbia.

SEEN FROM THE OPTIMIST'S TOWER

"Optymist," says Mrs. O'Toole, "They do be tellin' me that an optymist is a big burrd. Me cousin Dennis O'Malley wurrked on a ranch in Californey where they greew them for their tail feathers fer ornyments for ladies' hats. Dinnis says ahl there is to thim is tail-feathers, kick and appetite."

The optimist is not a democrat, but he would rather have "Watchful waiting" than the most elaborate military funeral in existence—provided his boy had to be the star actor in the latter.

The Polk County Observer observes that a Dallas woman, who has been reading up on the war with Mexico, recently visited a dry goods store and asked if they had any "Mexican border." The Observer comments that doubtless she was an annexationist. More likely she was twin to the young bride who went to the livery stable to buy liver.

Speaking of war, Bill Blodgett once owned a little fool dog named August. August was a cunning little tyke, but he had one bad habit—that of jumping at conclusions. In fact he used to jump at his own little conclusion by the half hour. One day he jumped at the conclusion of Josh Hastings' old striped legged sorrel mule. The next day was the first of September—that was the last of August.

All of which introduces the Optimist's personal program of "Preparedness," which he will propose at the risk of following August across the Styx. It is this: First, he would have the government take over the manufacture of every penny's worth of arms and munitions of war. Second, he would have the support of the army wholly borne by a graded income tax, thus taking it off the already too burdened shoulders of the farmers and laboring men. Third, he would make it imperative that the sons of all individuals financially interested in any war, and of all newspaper men advocating the war, should be drafted into the first levy of troops sent to the front as soon as hostilities are declared. Lostly, he would make it impossible to declare war without first taking a favorable referendum of the mothers and sweethearts of the young men of America. When these measures are adopted the Optimist will take off his jacket and root for "Preparedness" like all possessed.

One of the sanest and biggest things ever proposed by an American statesman is President Wilson's suggestion of a Tariff commission which shall permanently remove the tariff from politics. That master empire builder, James J. Hill, wrote to Senator H. H. Gross last April:

"Sound politics and sound political economy require that the tariff question be taken out of political controversy, and that such readjustments of duties as changes in business conditions may require from time to time be made only on the recommendation of a permanent tariff commission, composed of experts, and clothed with all necessary power * * * * Industrial peace and prosperity will never be firmly and finally established until the tariff is taken out of politics and placed in charge of a properly constituted body, whose conclusions are substantially final."

What a roar this suggestion brings from the republican press! Listen to the Morning Astorian:

"Take the limberness from limber,
Take the spiciness from spice;
Take the wood out of the timber,
Take the water out of ice."

Personally we never would have dared suggest that it would hit the republican party so hard. But the Fedora (S. D.) Messenger wails:

"Take the tariff out of politics,
Take the moisture out of snow,
Take the our out of flour
And the 'leaven' out of dough."

Still we thought the case might not be so bad until the Gladstone (Mich.) Delta joined the chorus:

"Take the lesson from the learner,
Take the writing from the clerk;
Take the earning from the earner
And the worker from his work."

Then comes this from the Lackawanna (N. Y.) Journal:

"Take the satan out of hades,
Take the headache out of booze;
Take the motion out of movies,
Take the sleepiness from snooze."

Finally the Sanger (Calif.) News opines:

"Take Hiram from the Johnsonites,
Take Teddy from the Progs;
Take the tariff out of politics
And the world will slip its cogs."

All of which leads the Optimist to the cogitation that—

Since there's now no North and there's now no South
And old battles have all been fought
Take the tariff out of the G.-O.-P.
And the whole thing goes to pot.

Speaking about tariff and other fool things reminds the Optimist of ministers. I do not mean the modern kind. I refer to the brand they used to make. When Jane came home from the tea-fight her mother asked:

"Were there many out tonight, Jennie?"

"Oh, quite a few. There were twenty-nine men and fifty-nine women and a preacher."

The days of the spike-tailed gospel coat, the white choker and the sanctified dog-collar are surely numbered. The average parson of today dresses like a real-estate agent, looks like a criminal lawyer, and is more or less human. Hence the following selected lines are reminiscent rather than remonstrant:

"The parish priest
Of Austerlitz
Climbed up in a high church steeple
To be near God,
So that he might hand
His word down to his people.

"And in his script
He daily wrote
What he thought was sent from Heaven,
And he dropped this down
On his people's heads
Two times one day in seven.

"In his age, God said,
'Come down and die'
And he cried out from his steeple,
'Where art thou, Lord?'
And the Lord replied:
'Down here among the people!'

The old chestnuts regarding preachers were also applied to minister's sons. A statistical crank has recently finished the study of years upon the subject. His finding is that a larger percentage of minister's sons make good than those of men of any other trade or profession. Which reminds us that Hughes was born in a Baptist parsonage and Wilson in a Presbyterian manse.

What do you think of the following exquisite little verse entitled "Conquest of Time," and written by Edward Rowland Still?

"Forenoon, and afternoon and night—
"Forenoon, and afternoon and night,
Forenoon, and—what!

The empty song repeats itself. No more?

Yea, that is Life; make this forenoon sublime, this afternoon a psalm, this night a prayer—and time is conquered, and thy crown is won."

—The Optimist.

Rural Credits Bill

If the proposed rural credits amendment is enacted by the people at the next regular election, it will go a long way toward relieving the farmer of the burden of debt and the excessive interest in commissions on the $30,000,000 farm indebtedness in this state. The average rate of interest on this indebtedness is but little under 9¼ per cent. Under the proposed bill the interest would be five per cent. To this would be added one per cent to pay off the principal and at the end of thirty-six years the entire indebtedness would be wiped out, the interest paid up and the claim settled on a payment of but six per cent annually on the entire amount borrowed. This would save one-third the annual interest bill and wipe out the debt in thirty-six years.—O. A. C. Press Bulletin.
