DAIRY and CREAMERY

COMFORT FOR THE COW.

Wise Dairymen Will Protect Her From the Sun and Insect Pests.

A great essential necessary for large milk production is that the cow be comfortable. Needless to say, the one who has been unkindful of the persistent manner in which cows have worked day and night, who has profited from the full pails of milk and yet who has not realized that the mild temperature, the bright but not hot sunshine, the abundance of fresh air and the freedom from flies and insects have all contributed to the comfort of the cows and made it easy, even tempting, for them to work their hardest.

Now the sun is hot and flies come in swarms, says Kimball's Dairy Farmer. There will be no comfort, no peace, for the cow from morning until night. For self protection she will be compelled to hunt the pools of water or the shade of trees and use her energy fighting flies and keeping as cool and comfortable as she can. Under these conditions it is impossible for her to produce milk either largely or profitably no matter how well she may be fed. Rapidly she will decline in milk flow, never to return to the same high plane of productivity until she freshens again. Millions of dollars is the toll thus exacted by the flies, bugs and excessive heat from the men who milk cows, but do not protect them against these ravages.

Until about twenty-five years ago the Guernsey breed of dairy cattle was not so well known or popular as some of the other breeds. During recent years, however, the Guernsey has come to the front through sheer merit and today stands in the front rank of milk and butter producers. The cow shown is a pure bred Guernsey.

To prevent this loss is not a difficult task, and each year finds more dairymen following the course of wisdom. On farms where the campaign of swatting the fly is practiced the number of these pests is becoming greatly lessened. There are sprays that will keep those that remain away from the animals, and he who has his stable properly ventilated for winter use can easily darken it and provide quarters that will protect his cows from the blinding rays of the midday sun.
Here they can eat green feed or silage, make milk and rest comfortably preparatory to grazing the pastures at night, when the sun is on the other side of the world and the insects are asleep. This will incur some extra work and perhaps a little expense, but the question as to whether or not it will pay well has been conclusively answered in the affirmative by Dame Nature every year since the cow was converted into an artificial being with the ability to provide large volumes of food for mankind.

DRYING OFF MILKERS.

Large Producing Cows Must Be Handled With Care to Prevent Injury.

The customary method of drying off the average dairy cow is simply to omit every other milking until the milk flow diminishes and then skip still more milkings till it stops entirely, says the Farm and Fireside. Sometimes the process will require two or three weeks, but usually less. A cow producing less than ten pounds of milk daily may be dried off any time without injurious results simply by stopping milking.

High producing cows are more difficult to handle in this respect, and some dairymen claim it is impossible to get their best cows to go dry. The first step to dry off an animal producing twenty pounds of milk a day or more is to change the feed. If she is on pasture remove her to a dry feed lot. If she has been receiving alfalfa or clover hay give her timothy or similar non-succulent feed. In winter time take away the grain.

Then milk at irregular intervals, and the flow will soon decrease. At the end of a week it will fall off about five pounds, and in a few more days milking may be stopped entirely. The udder may fill up, but in a few days the milk will be reabsorbed, and finally the udder will become normal. A rest of about six weeks is beneficial to the cow, and experience has shown that cows will have a greater annual yield if they are dried off instead of being milked up to the time of calving.

Black Nosed Guernseys.
The black nose of a Guernsey does not indicate impure breeding. There are many splendid pure bred Guernseys with black noses. A few of the Guernsey breeders make considerable objection to Guernseys having black noses. It is rather a foolish fact that there was a time when it was held that the Jersey must have a black tongue and a black switch, but this fact has passed, and we hope that the black nose will receive less attention in the future than it has in some instances in the past.—Hoard's Dairyman.

JAMISON QUILTS

Youth Appointed by Association is Qualified as Tester

The resignation of Neil C. Jamison as official tester for the Clackamas County Cow Testing association, has been accepted and E. D. Roseman, a recent graduate of the Oregon Agricultural college, has been elected to succeed him. Mr. Jamison will engage temporarily in creamery work at Mt. Angel, it is understood, and will later take up government agricultural work in Washington state. Mr. Roseman left the state college this spring and while there studied the many branches of the dairy industry. He is said to be well prepared to succeed Mr. Jamison.

RILEY LIVES FOREVER

Writer Contradicts Belittling Statement in Journal Editorial

Oregon City, July 25, 1916.—To the editor:—Measured by conventional standards his (James Whitcomb Riley) poetry is not "great." His genius was homely and rustic. Much of what he wrote was conceived in a tender twilight mood for children and is not likely to be permanently attractive to mature minds. It probably lacks those qualities which make Hans Christian Andersen's tales immortal and give the "Alice books" a perennial charm for old and young.—The Journal.

And who is this self-delegated egotist in the Journal sanctum, that he should presume upon the dignity of letters to tell intelligent readers that James Whitcomb Riley's works are "not likely to be permanently attractive to mature minds?" Who is this bigot whose place in the world gives him right to say that the poet's work lacks the quality that makes another's work perennially charming for young and old?

It is sad to see a man so engrossed in himself and so big of head, and small of mind that he will dare to set himself up as a dictator in matters literary. He is surely buried deep in his own sorry ignorance to publicly utter such a remark as "Much of what he wrote was conceived in a tender twilight mood for children." And he blatantly displays the follies of big headedness and little mindedness when he says that Riley's work is not "great" if measured by conventional standards. Who is the obscure, unknown editor who dares to set up or apply conventional standards to the measurement of so great a poet as Riley?

It is to be regretted that even one of his millions of lovers feels duty-bound to come to the defense of the poet at this sad time, but in death he deserves the praise that was thankfully given in his lifetime.

"Then, prayerful, let us pause until We find, as grateful spirits can, The way most worthy to fulfill The tribute due the man."

Riley was never a poet "for" children. His beautiful collection contains some few gems that might appeal to the young mind, but for the most part, in direct contradiction to the Journal's editorialist, his works are for mature minds; permanently attractive to mature minds. True, his poetry is of childhood, but not for it.

"He sings: and his song is heard, Pure as a joyous prayer, Because he sings of the simple things The fields, and the open air, The orchard-bough, and the mocking-bird, And the blossoms everywhere."

Who has read Riley and will say that his work does not contain a full measure of that perennial charm for old and young? For Riley wrote: "From his flying quill there dripped Such music on his manuscript That he who listens to the words May close his eyes and dream the birds Are twittering on every hand A language he can understand." Is it because the great Hoosier wrote in a language you and I can understand, rather, perhaps, than as a Wordsworth or even a Browning, that conventional standards belittle his greatness? Is it because he wrote of the babbling brook, the orchard-blossom, the sunshine and the flowers and of childhood that his work lacks "that perennial charm?"

He sang the song of the people—songs, the Journal says, which do not appeal to mature minds—the song he thought of when he wrote: "Make me a song of all good things, And fill it full of murmurings, Of merry voices, such as we Remember in our infancy; But make it tender, for the sake Of hearts that brood and tears that break, And tune it with the harmony, The sighs of sorrow make."

And yet we have one among us who has the brazen effrontery to tell us that these songs we love so well have not immortal charm; that they do not appeal permanently to mature minds; that they are for children.

Ridiculous! A no-nothing made such statements. The Journal should be censured by its owners before it is allowed to disgrace itself in public. For so long as human minds and hearts are built of the stuff that God puts into them today James Whitcomb Riley and his work will be immortal. They will live long after Hans Christian Andersen and his little Alice books have passed into that impendable shade. Riley will live forever in mature minds and always with that perennial charm for young and old, for

"I cannot say, and will not say That he is dead.—He is just away." E. C. B.

HOGAN HURT AGAIN

Oregon City Youth Released from Hospital Returns in Two Weeks

Lloyd Hogan, 24, millhand of Oregon City, was out of St. Vincent's hospital Portland, only two weeks, when he was taken back again Monday afternoon, suffering from a probable fracture of the skull, which he received in an auto accident at Ewahue station. He is not in a serious condition.

Hogan was released from the hospital two weeks ago, following an operation. Monday afternoon he was driving a light car on Terwilliger boulevard. It overturned when a wheel "dished" on a curve, and he was caught beneath it. W. B. Fechtmeier of Riverdale, assisted him and took him to St. Vincent's hospital.
