

THE BATTLE OF MILL SPRINGS.

First Decisive Union Victory of the Civil War.

THIS WAS FIFTY YEARS AGO.

Interesting Old-Time History by an Oregon Veteran.

When General Sherman reported to the war department late in the fall of 1861 that it would require 200,000 men to drive the rebels out of Kentucky his sanity was doubted and many northern newspapers wanted him removed from his command. The general's predictions were soon verified and long before the close of the year twice that number were sent into and through the state. The year 1862 opened with a large force of rebels in the vicinity of Louisville and troops were hurried to that city to prevent it from falling into the hands of the rebels.

On the first of January, 1862, Gen. Thomas started his force on what is known as the Mill Springs campaign, and from that time until January 17 spent most of the time in marching through rain, sleet and mud and finally went into camp at Logan's Cross Roads, eight miles north of Zollicoffer's entrenched rebel camp, on January 18. It had been raining incessantly all day and it was so dark that it was with much difficulty that pickets could be relieved. Just at daybreak the rebel advance struck the pickets of the union lines and several musket shots rang out with great distinctness and in quick succession, it being the first rebel shot that the union forces had ever heard. Then all was quiet for a time. The firing soon commenced again, nearer and more distinct than it was at first, and thicker and faster as the rebel advance encountered the union pickets. The Second Minnesota had entered the woods, and passed through the Tenth Indiana, then out of ammunition and retreating and no longer firing. The enemy, convinced by the cessation and mistaking its cause, assumed that they had the Yankees on the run, advanced to the rail fence separating the woods from the field just as the Second Minnesota was doing the same, and while the rebels got their first shot they were the first to get away and make a run to their rear. Before they ran, however, the firing was renewed and the two confederate regiments that confronted the Minnesota boys were made to feel that they had run up against something. To the right of the Second Minnesota were two of Kinney's cannon and to their right was the famous Ninth Ohio. The mist and smoke which hung closely was too thick to see through, but by lying down it was possible to look under the smoke and to see the first rebel line, and that it was in bad shape, and back of it and down on low ground a second line, with a third line on the high ground on the other side of the field. That the Second Minnesota was in close contact with the enemy was evidenced all along the line, as blasts of fire and belching smoke were coming across the fence from Mississippi muskets. The contest was at times hard to hand—the Second Minnesota and the rebels running their guns through the fence, firing and using the layonet where opportunity offered. The firing was very brisk for some time, when it was suddenly discovered that the enemy had disappeared. The battle was over, the Union had "skedaddled," leaving their dead and dying on the bloody field. Many of the rebels were killed and wounded and some few surrendered.

After the firing had ceased one rebel lieutenant bravely stood in front of the Second Minnesota and calmly faced his fate. After being called on to surrender he made no reply but deliberately raised his hand and shot a minor officer through the body. He was instantly shot. His name was said to be Bailie Peyton, son of one of the foremost union men in Tennessee.

Gen. Zollicoffer, commander of the confederate forces, was also killed in this battle. The battle of Mill Springs, although a mere skirmish in comparison with many other engagements that occurred before the close of the war, was watched with great interest by the people of the north, as up to this time few victories had crowned the efforts of the union hosts.

On the body of Bailie Peyton was a sword that had been presented to his father, Col. Peyton, by the citizens of New Orleans. At the outbreak of the Mexican war, Col. Peyton was on Gen. Scott's staff, and when Santa Anna surrendered the City of Mexico to Gen. Scott, Col. Peyton was the officer designated to receive the surrender of the Mexican capital and he carried the sword by his side. Young Peyton was what was known in Tennessee as a "hoopskirt" convert to the confederate cause. Southern ladies were looking for more popular boudoir accessories than were the sterner sex, and whenever they discovered that one of their chivalric brothers was a little lukewarm toward the cause of the south they sent him a hoopskirt, which indicated that the recipient was looking for a "hoopskirt" telling of his loyalty to the union he was biased and insisted on the streets of Nashville, and when he received a hoopskirt he determined to take up arms against the country he loved so well. He paid the penalty of his foolish recklessness in the first battle in which he was engaged.

It was the boast of confederate leaders that one rebel regiment was equal to two or more regiments of their northern adversaries. After this battle they had occasion to revise their calculation, as after the battle was over it was discovered that the confederate forces outnumbered the union forces nearly three to one.

The battle of Mill Springs proved a dominant factor in breaking up the confederate right flank and opened a way into East Tennessee, and compelled the rebels to withdraw all their forces to the vicinity of Nashville. The confederate loss was 600 killed and wounded and the union loss 248.

Gen. Zollicoffer was a prominent and influential citizen of Nashville and before the war started the state with Col. Peyton in opposition to the ordinance of secession, but when Tennessee seceded he determined to follow the fortunes of the state.

The loyal Kentuckians were in great aid and celebrated the victory over their rebel invaders. The Second Minnesota were given a banquet on their return to Louisville, and for their heroic conduct on the battlefield they received special congratulations from President Lincoln. The Minnesota legislature, then in session, passed resolutions commending the actions of the regiment in their first baptism of blood.

CLACKAMAS

The Clackamas Athletic Club basketball team played the Parkplace high school team at Parkplace, Friday evening, January 12, and was defeated by the score of 23 to 17. The boys have had no opportunity to practice and played a fine game considering the circumstances. Loebinger was the star of the evening, throwing six baskets for Clackamas. The Clackamas team was as follows: Laneberger and Hanover, forwards; Noah, center; Hartnell and Mooney, guards.

The Rebekah lodge of this place held a public installation of officers Wednesday evening. A team came from Oregon City to assist with the installation. The Rebekahs are having a prosperous year and are taking in new members at most every meeting.

The Odd Fellows lodge will hold their installation next Saturday evening.

Rev. Mr. Jones of the Congregational church has been ill and was unable to meet his appointments last Sunday.

The Methodist Sunday school will have two teachers' training classes from three to five at Hartnell's in South Clackamas Friday evening, and one in town on Thursday evening. This arrangement has been made to shorten the distance for those who wish to attend. A large class is expected at both places.

Mr. Hayworth, who has been ill with pneumonia, is up and around again. Dr. Barnes of Clackamas attended the case. We hope Dr. Barnes will remain with us permanently.

A family by the name of Moore has moved into the old Hokum place. They have two boys, both of whom are attending school.

Miss Lottie Johnson is visiting with friends in Portland.

GLAD TIDINGS

D. M. Bentley bought a seven-acre tract of Mrs. A. H. Logan of Marquam and is putting up a house, which will be completed in the near future, when he, his wife, and son Tillman will move in. His other sons, George, Jay and Tommie, will come to run the large homestead on Fred Myers' place, where they have been living since their arrival from Missouri eight years ago.

Chas. Hatten has set fourteen acres to hops, an unusually neat job, as the rows are set very straight, with system throughout. We understand that Jay Bentley superintended the work. "A man shall be known by his works."

O. L. Hammond and his brother-in-law, J. A. Riding, have given employment for the winter to two young men who had walked as far as Junction City, Lane county, from Portland, then back to this neighborhood. During their trip of nearly a month they got a show to make five dollars each. The writer had a conversation with them Sunday, and I must say that they were appreciative of the kind and courteous treatment extended to them, and the table even supplied with the best of edibles prepared by cooks who have few equals and no superiors.

The new store opened up by Mr. Peckman and wife of Molalla is said to be doing a rushing business selling goods at a reasonable price and giving general satisfaction. They are kind and obliging to all.

We note that Mr. Newsome has started his saw going again after a layoff and general good time of about one month.

Geo. and Tommie Bentley lately bought thirty-six acres of land from Mrs. Schumaker, the land being a portion of the original donation land claim of Alfred Marquam.

Frank Johnson appears busy cleaning up stumps and grubbs on the ten-acre tract he lately purchased from his father-in-law, Ole Roe.

Mrs. Sarah E. Holland, who died in Wapinitia, Ore., November 12, 1911, was well and favorably known in this neighborhood and will be remembered by all the older residents yet living. She and her husband, along with Jesse Boen, Berryman Holland, Martha Padgett and two grand children removed to Wapinitia, Oregon, in the month of October, 1902, twenty-one years ago, when she has resided continuously up to the date of her death. She was born in the state of Arkansas in the year 1838, being 73 years of age at the time of her death. At the age of eighteen years she was united in marriage to John Boen, a widower with two children, who are both living at this time, Tom Boen of Oregan, Arkansas, and D. H. or "Doc" Boen, well known in Oregon City. To this union there were born three children, Jesse P., born in 1858; Drucilla, born November 30, 1860, and Elizabeth, born in 1864. Her husband was taken from her bed as he lay beside his wife and the three little children, during the great conflict between the North and South in 1861, by bushwhackers as they were termed, and shot to death, the little children covering their heads in fright as they along with their mother were forced to hear Mr. Boen pleading for mercy, then the report of the guns and all was quiet—the husband and father lay dead. After the war, she and the three children emigrated to Oregon. Soon after her arrival she was again united in marriage to J. L. Holland, who survives her. To them were born three children, Berryman, born in 1869; Martha Padgett, born in 1871 and Mary Etta, born in 1875, who died in December, 1888. Mrs. Holland had a stroke of paralysis and lived but one week afterward. At the bedside when she gave up the battle of life were her son, Jesse P., wife and three children; her daughter, Drucilla Newsome and her great grandchild, of Victoria, B. C.; her grandson, Alva U. Newsome, wife and child, of Portland; and her granddaughters, Nellie and May Newsome of Winnemucca, Nevada, and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Pagett of the Dalles, Ore.

Her husband, J. L. Holland, under the physician's care at that time in the Dalles, was unable to attend her whose hours of suffering and agony were long and painful. She was fully realizing that her husband could live at most but a few more short months, her gentle, patient spirit took its flight across the borderland that separates the mortal from the immortal, that mysterious country from whose house no traveler ever returns. Being a true Christian, her firm belief was that there was a God; that he had prepared a haven of peace and rest for those who believed in him and served him, and she believed that all would be well. What a blessing such a relation, such a belief in the hour of dissolution. Peace to her gentle memory and a lingering, last farewell.

A NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE

By ARTHUR P. WINDHAM

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The chancellor of the German empire sat in his office writing when a young man entered and said:

"Your excellency sent for me, I believe."

"Ah, Von Arnheim," said the chancellor, looking up. "I have a very important mission for you. It is to the president of the United States and must be delivered on the 1st of January, when the president receives the diplomatic corps. I have selected this day because no attention will be attracted by a visit, and it need not be known that a call is on important diplomatic affairs. His majesty the emperor is desirous that the present struggle between Russia and Japan shall cease. Japan is not able financially to carry on the war and must soon give way on that account. This will give the czar a preponderance of power in the east antagonistic to German and other interests. No power in Europe is so situated on account of their varied interests to propose mediation. The only power fitted for such a purpose is the United States.

"His majesty the emperor desires to send by you to the president of the great republic a request that he will propose to the czar and the emperor of Japan a conference with a view to a treaty of peace. Since the czar knows of the financial stress of Japan he does not wish the war to terminate, but if a peace were proposed by the president of the United States the world's opinion would be so against Russia's refusal to treat that she would be obliged to yield. In a few weeks possibly he would win.

"Should his emissaries succeed in preventing you from delivering the message or delaying the emperor's request, obliging us to send another, the Japanese cause may collapse before a duplicate could be received. You may be watched from the time you leave here."

Von Arnheim left Berlin with the dispatch the same evening. The Russians at the German capital did not get wind of his mission until he had sailed, and there was only opportunity for them to instruct the Russian emissaries in America to endeavor to thwart his design after his arrival in New York. He had reached that city, rather, Hoboken, across the Hudson, where the German steamer, land, and was driving through a street that leads to the station of the Pennsylvania railroad when an auto came dashing along wildly, the chauffeur intentionally colliding with the cab in which the messenger sat. He lay for a few moments stunned, and the chauffeur, looking back and seeing that he did not move, sped on.

But Von Arnheim got up and with difficulty walked southward till he met another cab, which he hailed and reached the Pennsylvania station without further mishap. He was obliged to wait a couple of hours before the train left for Washington and while waiting he walked to and fro in the station and saw a man accompanied by a policeman coming toward him.

"That's your quarry," said the man to the policeman. "Arrest him. I have just come over in the same steamer with him, and he stole my watch."

Despite his protestations Von Arnheim was taken to a police station in Jersey City, and, being searched, a watch that did not belong to him was found in his pocket. Rather than make himself known and having still a week before New Year's day, he stood trial the next morning and was sentenced to jail for six months. On the way to prison he asked those escorting him to step into a saloon and have a drink. While there he convinced them that the charge was a put up job, gave each one of them $50 and was permitted to leave the saloon by a door in the rear.

He had no further trouble on the way to the station and hoped that he might be permitted to reach the capital in peace. But he was disappointed. Just before arriving at Philadelphia a woman took a vacant seat beside him and as the train was passing through the city raised a cry, arose with feigned indignation and accused Von Arnheim of insulting her. Leaving out of a window, she beckoned to a policeman, who got into the car, and the woman called upon him to arrest Von Arnheim.

Here was another detention. Von Arnheim, still unwilling to make his identity public, stood trial, several persons who had been in the car with him testifying that they saw him endeavor to take liberties with his accuser, and he was sent up for sixty days.

It was now the 27th of December, and but five days remained before New Year's day. Von Arnheim sent a message to the German minister informing him of his situation. A member of the German diplomatic corps visited the prisoner, received his message and returned to Washington on the 31st of December.

When the president the next day gave his public reception the German ambassador, watching his opportunity, spoke a few words to him in a low tone. The president replied in the same voice.

It was not very long after this that an announcement was made that the president of the United States had offered his services as mediator between the Russians and Japanese, and the announcement was followed by the treaty of Portsmouth.

On the 3d of January Von Arnheim was pardoned by the governor of Pennsylvania.

BRIEF NEWS OF OREGON

The senate has confirmed the nomination of Postmaster Hines at Forest Grove.

Fred P. Cronmiller has been appointed receiver of the Lakeview land office.

Marshfield is asking $200,000 from congress as a starter for jetty work at Coos Bay.

Gene Graham, a native of Weston, was electrocuted in that city by coming in contact with a live wire.

Alec McKay, a well known young man of Marshfield, cut his throat with a razor and may die. Despondency was the cause.

Electric power will soon be running the machinery at all the mines in the Mormon Basin, one of the principal districts in eastern Oregon.

The irrigation of 20,000 acres of land northwest of Vale is now assured by the financing of the Bully Creek project at a cost of $500,000.

A Chinese tong war, said to be far reaching in its effects and involving practically all the big cities of the Pacific coast, is brewing in Portland. Ground was broken Friday for the first building of the $3,000,000 Reed Institute at Portland, Mrs. Helen Ladd Corbett turning the first spadeful of earth.

Charles Wilcox was shot and instantly killed at Coquille by W. R. Foote, a retired rancher, who declared that Wilcox had ruined his young daughter.

The assessed valuation of property in Clatsop county was fixed by the assessor at $9,629,361, but the state board has increased it to more than $21,000,000.

After an investigation Roseburg officers have reached the conclusion that the body of the man found near Oakland two weeks ago is that of William Permann, a former Roseburg business man.

Oregon state taxes to be collected in 1912 total $3,063,815, an increase of $263,815 over the entire amount collected in the three years of 1905, 1907, and 1908, and $149,799 more than was collected in the two years of 1910 and 1911.

Under the new presidential preference law enacted by the last Oregon legislature all national convention delegates are entitled to $200 as expense money, provided their party cast five per cent of the vote at the last preceding election.

Taxation of fire insurance companies doing business in La Grande may lead to warfare between the council and the companies, for stubborn resistance against the new ordinance taxing fire insurance companies $25 annually has already been evinced.

GREATEST MEDICINE ON EARTH

A prominent citizen of Evansville, Ind., writes: "I was ill for five months with a pulmonary trouble, and had the best of doctors. I had hemorrhages and was in a very bad way. Through the advice of a friend I tried Vinol, and I feel that it saved my life. It is all you recommend it to be. I believe it is the greatest medicine on earth. I have advised others to try Vinol, and they have had the same results." (Name furnished on request.)

We want every one in this vicinity who is troubled with chronic colds, coughs, or pulmonary troubles, to come and get a bottle of Vinol.

If it does not get to the seat of trouble, heal the inflammation and stop the cough, we will cheerfully return every cent paid us for it. This shows our faith, and proves that you take no chances.
