SHUBEL

Farming is almost at a standstill, because of the weather being too wet. But never mind—it will be dry after Beacon Heights Hall will be a good place to meet your friends next Saturday evening, Nov. 20th. A dance will be given (and very likely such other things as usually go with a dance), to dedicate the new kitchen, which was deemed necessary when a supper was given.

On Saturday evening, Nov. 27th, at 7:30 P. M., there will be a road budget meeting held at the same hall.

Your "Buy in Oregon City" movement is being discussed and then cussed by the farmers. I'll venture to say that nine-tenths of the farmers believe in the move—that is, by changing the spelling of one word, and another little change. Instead of reading "Buy in Oregon City," it will read "Go By Oregon City," and they will all tell you they have good reasons. Let me give you one illustration, and there are dozens, too.

A farmer bargained with a certain firm in Oregon City to sell them some wheat. When he came with his load they hemmed and hawed; then finally agreed to pay him 87 cents but they would pay him 90 cents if he would take it out in flour, and further they would rather have oats and would pay him $25.00 per ton but they wanted him to take it out in flour. The farmer needed something besides flour, so called up another "Buy-it-in-Oregon-City" firm. Here is the answer he got: "No, I am not buying just now. I'll wait 'till I can get oats for about $20.00 per ton." A deal and said he would buy—and did, certain country merchant heard of the deal and still does buy, and paid $24.00 per ton.

Now don't you think that the farmer likes that motto: "Go by Oregon City," and not "Buy in Oregon City?" Now this did not happen ten or fifteen years ago, but in September, 1915. No doubt there are, and we know these merchants in Oregon City who are fair and try to do the right thing without argument, we will admit, and that the above can be applied to farmers as well. I think we will lay it to the system which we are living under and let it go at that.

No doubt every one who accepted the invitation of the Oregon City Commercial Club members to visit the Columbia Highway are satisfied that their hearts are in the right place. It surely was a treat to some of us. Thanks. Now if they could only think of some plan to get us such roads without taxing the people to death they would always have plenty of friends, or evolve, think of, or invent some plan whereby every farmer could have his own automobile within the next six months, the question would be solved at the next election. Now don't think I'm crazy. I am like the editors of our papers—they know all about road building; that is, it takes money to build roads, and I do not agree with them that the present system is a wasteful system, for there are a good many miles of road in Clackamas county, which had to be cleared of trees, stumps and rock, and hills to be graded down, and if they will investigate they will find that getting the Columbia Highway ready for hard surfacing took a good part of their one million dollars, and only 70 miles, while a good many road districts in Clackamas county have over half that many miles, and there are 60 districts in the county.

LIFE IN ESTACADA

Hunting of Fur-Bearing Animals in Cellars is Latest Vogue

Much has been written in late years of the huge profits made from the domesticating and raising of fur bearing animals and while the aroma may not be a true index to the amount of future profits, Walt Givens expects to be able to market not less than one gross of skunk hides this season, providing always that the hides are as easy to catch as the odor.

Walt is the proud owner of the former W. F. Cary home on Terrace Addition, with its sixteen cords of neatly piled wood in the basement. Said wood is now the resting, abiding and permanent headquarters of one or more skunks. Temporarily the family sleeping porch with its liberal supply of fresh air is popular with the Givens' family.

Seven different kinds of traps, two explosive baits, sixteen snares and a bird coop are now in the Givens' basement, awaiting the fur bearing inhabitants, who seem to be perfectly satisfied to spend the winter next to the cheer and warmth of the furnace.—(Estacada Progress.)

JACK FINDS "CRUSOE"

Constable Frost Called to Apprehend Real "Nature Man" in Woods

"When he crawled out of the hole in which he was living he looked just like Robinson Crusoe," said Constable Jack Frost, when he was telling of his apprehension of Martini Loretto, an escaped patient from ward 23 of the state insane asylum at Salem. Loretto was hiding in the woods near Rock Island, and was discovered by Joe and Clarence Engthouse, who notified the constable.

The "nature man" had been living in the woods for some time, and was very thin and very dirty. He had taken shelter in a hole under the roots of an old stump, and when called by Constable Frost showed no inclination to return to the ways of civilization.

At first the man refused to answer any questions, simply shrugging his shoulders; but later when confronted with an asylum guard who knew him he became more talkative, and said he was having a nice time out in the woods, and didn't see why he should be disturbed. He was returned to the asylum.

IT DIDN'T HAPPEN

Second Jitney Ordinance Remains Unborn at Behest of Templeton

The second jitney ordinance for Oregon City, which appeared mysteriously in the council chamber some weeks ago because "somebody slipped" as Councilman Templeton said; and which City Attorney Schuebel referred to as "a very good skeleton," was not produced for dressing and manipulation at Monday night's council meeting for two reasons. The first reason was that there wasn't any council meeting; and the second reason was that Mr. Templeton, godfather of the jitney ordinances, asked the mayor to let the skeleton slumber peacefully until the appeal of the Bagley decision on the first jitney ordinance had been determined.

Just why Mr. Templeton didn't care to have the second jitney ordinance started on its merry way was not revealed. In the meantime, jitneys will continue to operate unimpeded in Oregon City, and the county seat will get no revenue from them.

MRS. E. B. LOWE DIES

Well Known Oregon City Woman Succumbs to Illness

Though members of her family believed that she was recovering from an illness that had lasted for over a year, Mrs. E. B. Lowe died suddenly Monday afternoon at her home on Thirteenth street, Oregon City. She is survived by her husband, four daughters and two sons, and by a host of friends.

Mrs. Lowe was about 50 years of age, and had been prominent in many lines of church and charitable endeavor. Well known in the city, a large number of friends will mourn her loss, and extend sympathy to the members of her family.

Electricity

Simplifies Housekeeping

In The New Home

People who are building new homes should see that their houses are properly wired for Electric Domestic Appliances, not forgetting the Electric Range, which has arrived to stay.

In Homes Already Built

Those already established in new modern homes or those built years ago, will find it comparatively easy and inexpensive to extend the wiring so that an Electric Range may be connected.

The Electric Way is the Modern Way

For years inventors have worked on the problem of Electric Cooking Ranges. It is only recently that comparative perfection has been reached by the invention of a new metallic combination. So that now manufacturers are ready to Guarantee their products. It is now that this Company confidently presents Electric Cookery as practical.
