Hard Work for Women
It is a question if women doing men's work deserve particular sympathy, for it is doubtful if there is any work that is harder than everyday housework. Overwork tells on the kidneys, and when the kidneys are affected one looks and feels older than the actual years. Mrs. A. G. Wells, R. R. 5, Rocky Mount, N. C., writes: "I cannot praise Foley Kidney Pills enough for the wonderful benefit I have derived from their use for a short while."—Jones Drug Co.

AN ARCTIC RESCUE

Tragedy of the Loss of the Karluk Off Wrangell Island.

PERILS OF THE SURVIVORS.

The Hardships and Sufferings They Braved and the Scene When the Rescue Ship From Alaska Was Sighted by the Camp on the Desolate Beach.

When the Karluk, the chief vessel of the Canadian Arctic expedition which set out in June, 1913, became imprisoned by ice near Point Barrow, Alaska, Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the commander of the party, went ashore with five companions to hunt caribou. He never saw his ship again, for soon after he left her a furious northeast gale sprang up and carried her westward.

Near Wrangell Island, which lies north of Siberia, the ship succumbed to the tremendous pressure of the ice and sank. Eight of the Karluk's company were lost in trying to reach land, but seventeen survivors under Captain Bartlett succeeded in reaching Wrangell Island and on that uninhabited spot established a camp. From there Captain Bartlett, accompanied by one Eskimo, made the terribly difficult journey of eighty miles to the mainland of Siberia. He then went to Alaska and reported the fate of the Karluk.

Meanwhile Burt M. McConnell, the meteorologist of the expedition, who had left the Karluk with Stefansson, had made his way to Nome, Alaska. Here he joined Out Swenson, who had determined to go to the rescue in his little schooner King and Winge.

Almost eight months after the Karluk sank they sailed from Nome and, after encountering the usual difficulties of arctic navigation, successfully drew within sight of the cliffs and beach of Wrangell Island. Mr. McConnell tells the story of the rescue in Harper's Magazine:

The lookout in the crow's nest sighted a tent when we were within two miles of shore, and as we came nearer, under full speed, we could see a flagpole and a cross.

Suddenly a man emerged from the tent on his hands and knees. He did not show any signs of joy. He did not wave his arms and shout when he sighted the ship. He merely rose and stood rigidly beside the tent, gazing at us as if dazed. More than once he brushed his hands across his eyes, as if he could not believe that the King and Winge was a real ship come to rescue him.

Our first fear was that the entire party, with the exception of the one man we saw, had perished, but that gloomy possibility was dispelled presently by the appearance of two other men. None of the trio made any demonstration. Aboard ship even the Eskimos were intensely excited.

The mist was launched, and when it was within a hundred yards of the beach the man whom we had first seen started toward us, taking a rifle from his case. Our natives became greatly frightened. They pointed to their foreheads and muttered: "That man long time not much eat! Him crazy—all same fox!"

We landed on the beach and advanced toward this strange individual. His shaggy, matted hair streamed down over his eyes in wild disorder. His grimy face was streaked and furrowed with lines and wrinkles. I recognized him only by his voice when he spoke to Swenson. It was Munro.

"I don't know who you are, but I'm mighty glad to see you all," were his first words.

An instant later he recognized me and asked in astonishment, "How did you get here?"

Other questions were rapidly asked and answered, and then, "Have you a doctor aboard?" Munro demanded.

"You don't need a doctor," Swenson assured him. "What you need is a cook. We will go aboard and have breakfast."

Munro then came up, weak and emaciated. I did not recognize him until Munro spoke his name. He smiled in recognition, but was so visibly affected that I refrained from questioning him. Templeman next appeared. He was gaunt and very pale and seemed on the verge of a nervous breakdown. So we talked of general topics and asked no questions about their experiences.

Aboard the schooner the rescued men had a sumptuous breakfast, but an hour afterward they were hungry again.

"Mr. Swenson, I want to ask a great favor of you," Munro finally gained courage to say. "For several months I have been dreaming of eating a whole can of condensed milk with a spoon."

Three cans were immediately brought forth, as both Munro and Templeman confessed to a similar craving, and they ate that condensed milk as if it were ice cream.

At another camp forty miles away the King and Winge rescued nine other survivors. Three had died after reaching the island.

Making Progress.

"Don't you sometimes have to reprove your boy Josh?"
"Not any more," replied Farmer Cornstossel. "To tell you the truth, he's got me sort of apologetic to him for the crude manner in which I was brought up."—Washington Star.

Reason's whole pleasure lies in these words. Health, peace and competence.—Pope

FOUR WEEKS IN HOSPITAL

No Relief—Mrs. Brown Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"For years I suffered so sometimes it seemed as though I could not stand it any longer. It was all in my lower organs. At times I could hardly walk, for if I stepped on a little stone I would almost faint. One day I did faint and my husband was sent for and the doctor came. I was taken to the hospital and stayed four weeks but when I came home I would faint just the same and had the same pains.

A friend who is a nurse asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I began taking it that very day for I was suffering a great deal. It has already done me more good than the hospital. To anyone who is suffering as I was my advice is to stop in the first drug-store and get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before you go home."—Mrs. W. C. BROWN, 2844 W. 12th St., Cleveland, Ohio.

POULTRY AND EGGS

CHICKS IN THE BROODER.

Greatest Danger the First Week Is That of Overfeeding.

More chicks die from overfeeding than from underfeeding, probably because few of us have any conception of the bird's capacity. It is surprising how far a quart of grain will go in the matter of feeding a flock of chicks.

For the first few days a chick's attention is so occupied in learning how to walk, run, flap his wings, drink and eat that he seldom gorges himself, no matter how much feed is placed before him; consequently the quantity may be said to be unimportant—a handful of scratch grains to a hundred chicks will suffice. Once he acquires the taste for food, however—say when he is about a week old—he seems to concentrate his entire attention on it, and then the feeding should be done judiciously.

Many people are in such a hurry to get the chicks growing that they start to feed them as soon as they are removed from the incubator. The chick's system is not ready for food at this time, hence it results in bowel trouble or indigestion, and very often the chick dies. The last development in incubation prior to breaking the shell is the embryo chick's absorption of the yolk.

The picture of the hen and chicks here shown was taken at the experimental farm conducted by the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, at Beltsville, Md.

This highly nutritive material is calculated to sustain life for two or three days, or until the chick is strong enough to walk about and forage for himself.

Positively there is no need of other nourishment at this time, and to supply any will invariably work more harm than good. The absorption of the yolk is nature's provision, with which it is folly to interfere. Water with the chick taken off it may be used freely as soon as the chicks are removed from the incubator, but care should be taken that the little fellows do not swallow it and get wet.

Drinking water should be accessible at all times, preferably in shallow receptacles or in fountains made for the purpose. If the fountains are allowed to go dry and the chicks become thirsty the attendant is in for trouble. When the water is given out again the chicks will pile up around the fountains in their eagerness to quench their thirst and will trample each other and splash in the water. A lot of drenched chicks will result, which is very apt to cause chills and death. Then again, cases of cramps are caused by letting the chicks become thirsty and then fill up on water.

Healthy Chicks Are Lively.

Both hoveer and run must be kept clean, and frequent disinfecting will control disease. Short, dry litter in the hoveer for keeping the chicks' feet dry and warm and for absorbing excreta, should be supplied fresh every day. The chicks as they grow older will scratch the short litter vigorously and throw it in piles and in every direction, but that is a part of their business for developing strong bodies for efficient maturity. When chicks are inclined not to run or fly or scratch something is the matter. Much activity is a sign of healthy conditions.

Handling Chicks at Night.

Chicks should be allowed to harden for forty-eight hours or a little longer before being transferred from incubator to brooder and should be transferred at night. They will then not wander away from the heat and become chilled, as they are liable to do in daylight. By morning they will have become accustomed to the location of the source of heat so that they will return to it involuntarily when cold.

The heavy breeds of fowls are not to be overlooked in making a choice of stock, for most profitable results have been obtained from the Brahmas, Cochins and the Langshans. When properly handled these fowls are capable of producing excellent results for farm poultry raising.

stance, in seed potatoes from infested areas. Its presence in potatoes may generally, but not always, be recognized by the appearance of the injured tuber. The skins are rough and cracked, covered with irregular pimples. On breaking—not cutting—open an infested potato, small, brownish spots with pearly centers may be found under the skin. These are the cysts made by the active worm in its feeding stage, but the worm is microscopic in size, so that its presence is known only by its ravages. The bulletin gives ample directions for avoiding the distribution of the pest in infested seed, and much other information of great value to the grower. Send to O. A. C. for a free copy.

"HOW DELIGHTFUL IT IS"

Or the Last Words of General Funston at San Antonio

(By Henry Polk Lowenstein)

How delightful it is to do one's duty well;
How delightful it is in the House of God to dwell.

How delightful it is, like Sheridan on his ride,
With a heart full of hope, to swim to the Other side.

How delightful it is, at Country's call,
To put on armor and fight for all.

How delightful it is, in foreign land,
To uphold the flag and for Justice stand.

How delightful it is to slip out of the sod,
And on the wings of music to fly to God.

Listening to the orchestra playing a beautiful waltz in the hotel where he was stopping in San Antonio, Texas, General Funston, speaking to a little girl nearby, said "How delightful it is!" and then expired, these being his last words.
