

CANBY AND SOUTHERN CLACKAMAS

COUNCIL MAY ORDER MAIN STREET PAVED

A committee was appointed to interview representatives of the Southern Pacific Company and an effort will be made to have this company allow city garbage dumped on the company's property in the southern part of the city. If this fails a proposition will be made to Joseph Steffan, who has property in the northeast part of the city.

Recorder Wait was appointed to take up the matter of paving Main street. This matter was discussed for some time at the meeting, and the city dadas seem to be in favor of having the Main street improved, unless the cost is too great.

GOOD ROAD TO MARQUAM

Much interest is manifested by the people of Canby and Marquam in the proposed improved road extending from this city to that place. A petition was presented to the county court Wednesday and which had over 400 signers.

If this road is improved, as desired by the residents of this section of the county, it will give 14 miles of fine highway, and will be the means of adding to the value of the property lying in that district.

It was also decided to go to Portland during May, to attend a theatre and supper. There are 20 members belonging to the club, and its officers are President, Mrs. Arthur Graham; secretary, Mrs. E. G. Robinson; treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Bair.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBERS RETURN

J. J. Sandness, of this city, W. Courand, of Beaver Creek, A. K. Ford and son, Eugene, of West Linn, left here by automobile for the southern part of the state last week. They had many punctured tires, and had it not been for being supplied with a repair kit, they would still be in the wilderness near Roseburg.

The destination of the party was 50 miles from Roseburg, but these men believe they went more than 100 miles, for they climbed mountains that a goat could not climb, they say. Their appetites were immense, but Mr. Courand and Mr. Ford being familiar with the frying pan and skillet saw to the wants of the hungry four. There was one regret on the part of the automobile party. When they arrived in the mountains and near Looking Glass they passed a stream, which was fairly alive with mountain trout. Fishing tackle had been forgotten, and had the members of this party brought this with their baggage, they would have been able to take all the fish home they could carry, but such was the luck of the Hungry Four. They only sat on the bank of the stream and admired the fish they might have had.

The return trip was made by way of Salem, and the party reached Canby Monday afternoon.

STUDENTS HOLD PICNIC

The sophomore and freshman classes of the Canby high school held a picnic at Goodie's bridge near the Molalla river Wednesday evening. Supper was cooked and a most enjoyable time was had.

The chaperons were Miss Helen Gleason and Miss Sporr.

PAUL SCHAUBEL PENS LETTER FROM ABROAD

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Schaubel, of Canby, have received the following letter from their son, Paul S. Schaubel, who is in France, telling of some of his experiences since entering the service:

Jan. 24, 1919

Toul, France, A. T. O. 784

"Dear Folks: This being the anniversary of the date upon which I held up my right hand and swore to uphold the Constitution of the United States, and incidentally it became the duty of some officer to make a soldier of me, I thought I would write a letter and tell you of some of the experiences I have had and also some of the things I have seen, while I sit here with my trusty pencil. I doubt whether the following lines will interest you very much.

"Well to begin with, I arrived at Kelly Field on January 19, 1918, and I never felt more lost in my life than I did when looking for the headquarters to which I was to report. Having taken up an entire forenoon in finding the place and reporting, I was at last assigned to a tent in the 'Rookie' lines, and I felt easier. I lounged around the line till the 24th, upon which date a bunch of us were taken over to headquarters and examined, and sworn in. In the next few days we received our outfit of clothing, including mess kits and blankets and cots. Then followed a series of trade tests, and I finally found myself transferred to line 150, the engine test line there to await assignment to a squadron. The much-looked-for word came on February 21 and I found myself a member of the 831 Repair Squadron and they were out going.

We left Kelly Field on February 23. We were routed over the M. K. & T. through New Orleans, crossed the Mississippi on a ferry at Baton Rouge, through Memphis, thence to Cairo, Ill., where we crossed the Ohio river and the next morning found us at our journey's end, at Rantoul, Ill. We marched out to Chanute Field, about a mile distant, there to go into a period of preliminary training, myself among a few others being assigned to the motor repair shop. Our stay at Chanute proved a short one as we arrived February 27 and left March 25th for Hempstead, Long Island, arriving March 27. Our stay on Long Island consisted mostly of drills and hikes preparing us for the hikes and marches we looked forward to upon our arrival over here.

"On the 2nd of May we were ordered to entrain, we did not know where but we had a hunch, so none of us were surprised when our destination proved to be a dock in Hoboken. Our boat proved to be Alastair of the English fleet. She had been a passenger ship before the war, at the outbreak of which the English had converted her to a blockade runner to be used in the North Sea. She mounted eight, six-inch guns and two anti-aircraft, was 619 feet long and since there were only 750 men on board besides the crew we were most comfortably located.

"We steamed out of New York harbor May the third; passed the Statue of Liberty, out past the fort at Sandy Hook, and we realized our trip across the Atlantic was begun. The convoy consisted of 16 ships, among them was the Carpathia, which picked up the survivors of the ill-fated Titanic.

"The first day was taken up in placing each ship in its position in the convoy, that being accomplished the voyage started in earnest. The cruiser which accompanied us was the San Diego, which was torpedoed last July. We were fourteen days in crossing and aside from seeing a couple of sharks and a school of porpoises the trip proved uneventful. We arrived in Liverpool harbor the morning of the 17th of May, and while we were putting in at the docks another ship rammed us and tore a very large hole in the ship we were on, but the damage was way above the water line so it did us no material harm. The crash dismounted a run on the other ship and caused a sailor to jump overboard to prevent his being crushed.

"We disembarked about nine o'clock at night, marched about six blocks and laid in the streets until midnight to allow a division of Infantry to pass. We fell in and then followed about a seven mile hike to Knotty Ash rest camp, and by the way, Louis Mitts can tell you something of Knotty Ash, as it was there I met him. We arrived there about three o'clock in the morning, and, believe me, I was about ready to go to sleep any place. I spread my blankets on the board floor of the tent and for once I forgot to comment on how hard the bed was.

"We left Knotty Ash May 19th and arrived at Flower Down, American rest camp, near Winchester, about eight o'clock of the same date. Our stay there was utilized in drill and hikes, the hikes proving the most interesting feature, as we were privileged to visit some of the interesting places located near.

"Winchester was at one time the capital of England, and within its confines are located buildings, prominent in English history. Among them are the Winchester Cathedral, the King's house, the West gate and the ruins of the Castle of the Duke of Winchester, which Cromwell destroyed from the crest of St. Mary's hill about a mile distant. You may be able to gain some idea of the size of the Cathedral when I say Cromwell housed a large portion of his army, including the horses, within its walls. About the most interesting thing and one which in my mind represents the greatest amount of patience and labor, is the Altar Veil. This consists of a veil of hand carved marble about thirty feet wide and twenty feet high. It has crypts to accommodate fifty pieces of statuary two feet in height. The entire veil is a mass of carvings and no two designs alike. Among those who lie at rest within are the remains of Bishop Wulfelf, who, at his death set aside a sum of money, which is still used to relieve the thirst and hunger of the wayfarer—a little roadside inn where anyone going by may obtain a glass of ale and a sandwich.

"At the King's house I saw what is supposed to have been King Arthur's round table. It is near fourteen feet in diameter and has been hewn by hand. I also saw the entrance to the underground passage way through which Mary Queen of Scots made her escape.

"In the west gate I saw relics of ancient warfare, lances, armour, swords, and an iron cage in which captives were placed and allowed to starve. This cage was only the size of a man's body, having a ring in the crown at which point it was suspended, on a gibbet, the victim being exposed to the weather.

"On the seventh of June we were ordered to entrain and proceed to Stamford, Lincolnshire. We arrived about six P. M. of the same date and hiked to the flying field about three miles distant.

"Stamford is said to be the oldest town in England having been founded about 300 B. C. It was under Roman rule during the days of Caesar and a portion of the Roman road and wall with which they surrounded the city may still be seen. I was informed by one of the residents, with whom I became acquainted, that the city is undermined by a system of underground rooms and passageways in which the Romans took refuge and at the present time, in making excavations for different purposes, they frequently uncover remains and even caskets containing mummified bodies.

"Situated near Stamford and surrounded by a series of beautiful parks is Bureleigh House, a relic of Queen Elizabeth's reign. The building has 365 windows and twelve doors and from a distance resembles a Turkish Mosque.

"I suppose you are wondering if we did anything but look the towns and old buildings over, well rest assured that after our arrival at No. 1 T. D. S. we 'put out' as they say in the army. I was again assigned to the motor shops and during the remainder of my stay with the 831 Squadron I worked every day, Sundays included.

"We were given a holiday on the 4th of July and on two other occasions were again favored. It was while I was at Stamford that I had my first ride in a plane and, let me say, it is the finest ride imaginable, you sail through the air a rival to the birds, and the view below certainly is beautiful. As you rise you have the feeling the earth is falling away and when landing it looks like it was coming to get you and believe me, it comes fast.

"On the twenty-sixth of August I received orders to pack up and report to 1108 Replacement Squadron, as I had been transferred to that organization, and once again I found myself in Winchester, on the home stretch for France.

"The following few days were put in, in drilling and inspections and organizing the squadron, and on the 4th of September we entrained for South Hampton, where we embarked on the Alexander, a packet plying between South Hampton and Havre.

"We left the docks about 5:30 P. M. and proceeded through the harbor ways, passed the forts and subnets, which guarded the shipping inside against the U-Boats.

"We docked about 1:30 A. M., disembarked between 8 and 9 the following morning and hiked to a rest camp about four miles distant. About the most appreciable thing about the camp was the bread, good honest white bread, and you can imagine how good it tasted when you know it was the first I had eaten in four months.

"We left No. 2 rest camp at midnight September 7, enroute to St. Maunet a concentration camp of the U. S. air service. We traveled most of the time by daylight and our train was composed of side-door pullman which could accommodate (in a pinch) 8 Cheveaux or 40 Hommes. Our route lay through a very pretty portion of France, we crossed the Seine near Paris and from then on it was hard to realize from the landscape we were several thousand miles from the United States. We passed grain fields in the stubble, reminding one of the farms of Nebraska or Kansas. Leaving these the road lay through a range of low lying hills covered with trees and undergrowth common at home. Then we passed through an area devoted to raising grapes and the manufacture of wines, and let me say, there is plenty of wine in France, and the French know how to hold down a seat in a cafe and punish the 'vin blanc' and 'vin rouge.'

"We arrived at St. Maxinet the morning of September 9th, marched out to the coffee barracks, thence back to the town and were finely located and billeted within the confines of the cathedral there. This old building was constructed during the 13th century and is historically connected to some of the previous wars of France.

"The section which we occupied having, during Napoleon's time, been used as the headquarters of the 9th army corps, while within the same building is a dungeon in which the Emperor was held a prisoner, before being sent into exile.

"I was transferred on September 11th to the 223 Squadron, to which organization I still belong, and on the 16th we were ordered to leave, arriving on the 19th of September, at Colomley Le Bells, in the zone of advance.

"It was here the first Air Depot of the United States Air Service was located. We were assigned to duty on the field. Through this depot planes were dispatched or issued out to squadrons on duty at the front. The main assembly plant was located near Paris and after the planes were erected and tested they were flown to the 1st Air Depot for a final inspection and test before being issued for service.

"I was assigned to a crew working on Solmeson's a French type of plane, but was later made crew chief on the Liberty planes. These were of the D. H. type equipped with the Liberty motor. I was then put in charge of all P. E. planes, a type of British night bombing plane, which I had become familiar with while in England. About a week later I was made chief motor mechanic of the field which position I held till our departure. It was while at Colomley I took the examination for Airplane Mechanic, which rating I now hold, and which carries a 50 per cent increase in pay, and now makes my monthly pay ninety dollars.

"One incident connected with our stay in Colomley I don't think I shall soon forget, that being the first night the Germans dropped a bunch of J. I. cans, as they are called, they dropped ten right on the flying field, narrowly missing the erection and repair hangar. When anyone tries to tell me the Germans were only guessing at the location of the field, I usually inform him I think he is crazy or not real bright, as no one can convince me that a man can guess at a target and make a hit the first attempt. To my knowledge there was only one plane, and I have always been grateful there were no more, as at that time they could have done millions of dollars worth of damage, for at this time we had near five hundred Liberty planes besides the Salmons, Breguets, Spads, Campbells, etc.

"The Germans came again on the evening of October 30, but were so well entertained they had no time to pay any attention to the field of its contents, and the signing of the Armistice a few days later ended their visits.

"On October 15th we were ordered to Toul and for the past two months we have been doing motor transport repair work for headquarters of the 2nd army to which we are at present attached.

"Since the armistice was signed I have enjoyed the privilege of a seven day leave, at the Savoie, leave area, near Aix le Bains. We enjoy the very best of accommodations at first class hotels, and together with the interesting places we visited and the lack of army discipline those seven days were certainly great.

"I have not said anything regarding the people either of England or France, but those with whom I have come in contact certainly extend the best of hospitality, although I think the French more sincere.

"England as a whole is a very beautiful place and one does not see the material ravages of war such as is seen in France, and I firmly believe in times of peace when things are normal, France would run England a close second as far as beauty is concerned, but taking everything into consideration, give me the United States and the sooner I get there the better, though I know there are others who are more entitled to return, and I say let them go first.

"Of the organizations doing welfare work over here, its hats off to the American Red cross and the Salvation Army. There may be a certain amount of graft within the organizations but they don't pull any of the small town stuff the Y. M. C. A. has in the past.

"Of the treatment I have received in the army I cannot complain, I don't think I ever felt better in my life, but don't imagine I will not be grateful now that the big pow-wow is over, when I am mustered out and can enjoy my personal freedom again.

"Well, this has proved rather a lengthy narrative and if it has interested you in anyway I shall feel I have been repaid for my efforts.

Wishing each and every one a happy future and a full measure of prosperity I remain sincerely

MR. AND MRS. BADGER ARE SURPRISED WITH FAREWELL RECEPTION

Last Saturday evening while R. L. Badger was feeding those pure bred Jersey calves, while "Ronie", alias E. D. Roseman of Dayton, the general roustabout, was separating that rich Jersey milk, and while Mrs. Badger was firing some nests full of eggs for broody hens, just as though she expected to be around all summer, a large portion of Denver Creek took possession of Badger Farm. They came by auto, hack and hoof till the house was running over and there was standing room outside. The surprise was complete and took the nature of a farewell reception. On behalf of the neighbors Mrs. George Havill presented a beautifully engraved silver berry spoon and a feeling response was given by both Mr. and Mrs. Badger. A photograph supplied by Mr. Kelly furnished music, and sandwiches, cake and coffee, brought by the women, finished out an enjoyable evening. There were 41 present and all left wishing the Badgers the best of luck.

PROPOSAL TO DONATE PARK TURNED DOWN

A petition to the city council to furnish two men for the upkeep of a park to be donated to the city, and the improvement of this was rejected Wednesday evening on account of the shortage of funds available.

This petition was presented by Mary H. Thompson and the proposed park is near Fern Ridge. The petitioner recently purchased the property for the park as a memorial to her parents, the late John and Susan Meldrum, pioneer residents of Clackamas county.

She asked the council to improve the land and provide for the upkeep, but retained the right to the property providing the council failed to do this and also that she be allowed to erect a memorial tablet to the memory of her parents.

The council declined, recommending petitioner to take up the matter with some organization.

As May 10 is the time limit for the removal of the Liberty Temple, the recorder was instructed to see that it was removed by that time or to inform Mr. McBain, who the lumber belongs to, that it has served its purpose and was not now needed. Representatives of the business men of that section asked the council to take immediate action as the Temple was a nuisance and they wished its removal.

John W. Loder petitioned the council to reduce tax liens on some of his property, alleging that these liens were more than 50 per cent. of the value of the land. This was referred to the city attorney.

Traffic Officer Joyner sent in his resignation Wednesday night and this was accepted, the chief of police to arrange for this office. Reasons given by Mr. Joyner were that his commission from the fines were not enough to pay him as very few fines were assessed.

As City Health Officer Dr. Norris has been ill and unable to attend to his duties it was suggested to the council to turn part of this work over to the county health officer, Dr. Orin Welch. The proposition was to give Dr. Welch the sanitation work and this was left to Dr. Norris, he to appoint an assistant if he wished.

Chief of Police Woodward reported six arrested for the month and $149.50 in fines collected. City licenses were $115. The general fund amounted to $269.50 for the month.

The council has been offered $60 a month for the fire hall, this to be used as a business house. A committee was appointed to investigate this matter.

The cost to Oregon City in the preparation of the properties will be close to $2,000, but the committee expects to obtain considerable volunteer work. Mr. Eby, who is chairman of the promotion department of the Commercial Club, expressed himself as being enthusiastic for the cooperation of Oregon City, from a publicity angle, and W. P. Hawley, president of the Hawley Pulp & Paper company, promised two carloads of lumber to aid the movement. It is the purpose of the committee to have a country-wide celebration in connection with the appearance of the motion picture players here.
