CHAPTER IX.

Marauders.

The surprise was easily effected, for Colonel Cobo's men were accomplished in this sort of work. Rosa, crouching upon her bench, heard nothing, saw nothing, until out of the shadows beside her human forms materialized. She screamed once, twice; then a palm closed over her mouth and she began to struggle like a cat.

Evangelina, who had waked at the first outcry, met the marauders as they rushed through the door. There were shouts and curses, loudly belated orders, a great scuffling and pounding of feet upon the dirt floor of the hut, the rickety, bark-covered walls bulged and creaked. Over all sounded the shrieks of the negroes battling in the pitch-black interior like an animal in its lair. Then someone set fire to the thatch; the flames licked up the dead palm leaves to the ridgepole, and the surroundings leaped into view.

Rosa saw a swarthy, thickset man in the uniform of a colonel of volunteers, and behind him Pancho Cueto. Tearing the band from her lips for a moment, she cried Cobo's name, but he gave no heed. Rosa shrieked his name again; then she heard the officer say:

"Where is the young fellow? I hear nothing but the squeals of that common wench."

Evangelina's cries of rage and defiance ceased, and with them the sounds of combat. From the blazing bohio ran two armed men, brushing sparks from their clothing. A third followed, dragging Evangelina by one naked arm.

Rosa felt herself swooning, and she "new nothing of what immediately followed. After a time she felt herself shaken, and heard the colonel addressing her.

"Come, come!" he was saying. "Where is your precious brother and that black fellow?"

Rosa could only stare dully. "It seems we missed them," said Cueto.

"More of your bungling!" Cobo broke out at him, wrathfully. "Fool! I've a mind to toss you into that fire!" He turned his attention once more to Rosa, and with a jerk that shook her into fuller consciousness repeated: "Where are they? Speak to me!"

"Gone!" she gasped. "Gone!" She struggled weakly toward Cueto, imploring him, "Pancho, don't you know me?"

"Well, we've taught him a lesson," said Cueto, grinning apprehensively at Cobo. "We've accomplished something, anyhow, eh?" He nodded at Rosa. "She's all that I told you. Look at her!"

Colonel Cobo took time to scrutinize his prisoner.

"Yes! She's a pretty little spy—quite a prize, truly. Now, then! His thick lips spread; he spoke to her more gently. 'I want you to tell me about that brother of yours, eh? Cueto said I would find him here. Ha! Still frightened, I see. Well, I have a way with women; I dare say you'll be glad to tell me everything by and by.' Then, seeing that his men risked a scorching in their search of the hut and were already quarrelling over the scanty plunder which it afforded, he turned from Rosa to call them away.

Profiting by his inattention, Rosa wriggled out of his grasp and ran to Evangelina, who lay face down in the dirt, her limbs sprawled loosely. She flung herself upon the prostrate body and cried the black woman's name, but she could awaken no response.

The first pink of dawn was now deepening in the east, and as soon as it had grown light enough to see to travel Colonel Cobo prepared to return to his horses. The roof and walls of the bohio had fallen away to ashes, its skeleton of poles and its few pieces of crude furniture alone were smoldering when he called his men together and gave the word to go.

"Come, my sweetheart," Cobo addressed himself to the girl. "Leave that carrion for the buzzards." Rosa looked up to find him leering at her. She brushed the tears from her eyes, crying:

"Go away! In God's name haven't you done harm enough?"

"Oh, but you're going with me." The girl rose; her face was colorless; she was quivering with indignation. "Leave me!" she stormed. "What have I done to you? Don't—"

"Caramba! A temper. And you have strength, too, as I discovered. Must I bind those pretty hands or—"

Colonel Cobo reached forth, laughing, and encircled her in his powerful arms. Rosa fought him as she had fought at the first moment of desperation, but he lifted her easily and went striding across the field behind his men.

Esteban's party made good time over the hills and into the San Juan. For Asensio knew the country well. Mid-afternoon found them in sight of La Joya. Cueto's came was thick and high; it was ready for the knife or for the torch. The incendiaries dismounted in the shelter of a wood and removed the bags which they had carried on their saddles. Inside these bags were several snakes, the largest perhaps eight feet in length. To the tail of each the negroes fastened a leather thong, and then to each thong a length of telegraph wire, the end of which had been bent into a loop to hold a bundle of oil-soaked waste. These preliminaries accomplished, they bore the reptiles into the cane fields at widely separated places and lighted the waste.

Soon tongues of flame appeared and the green tops of the cane began to shrivel and to wave as the steady east wind took effect. Smoke billowed upward and was hurried westward before the breeze; in a dozen places the fields burst into flame. From somewhere came a faint shouting, then a shot or two, and finally the ringing of a bell.

Esteban waited until he saw that his work of devastation was well under way, then he led his followers back toward the hills.

In the shelter of a ravine the party took time to eat supper, their first meal since leaving home, and it was after dark when they finished. The negroes, who were thoroughly tired, were for spending the night here, but Esteban, more cautious than they, would not have it so. Accordingly, the men remounted their weary horses, though not without some grumbling, and set out. At length they crossed the summit and worked down toward the Yumuri, but it seemed as if daylight would never come.

Esteban suddenly reined in his horse. "Look!" said he. "Yonder is a light."

"What is Evangelina thinking about?" Asensio muttered.

"But see! It grows brighter." There followed a moment or two during which there was no sound except the breathing of the horses and the creak of saddle leathers as the riders craned their necks to see over the low tree tops before them. Then Esteban cried:

"Come! I'm afraid it's our house." Fear gripped him, but he managed to say, calmly, "Perhaps there has been an accident."

SUIT IS FILED BY MILL OPERATORS TO COLLECT DAMAGES

E. F. and J. A. Palmquist entered suit Monday against W. F. Strack, asking for damages of $2,500, alleging they suffered damages to this amount by an action of the defendant.

Plaintiffs alleged they and the defendant entered into a contract whereby they were to purchase all the cedar timber on property of the defendant except enough for him to make 1250 fence posts.

After the contract was made plaintiffs alleged they erected a mill and several buildings on the property and made roads and bridges so as to be able to reach their mill and after they had been operating the mill for some time the defendant erected a fence across the road and ordered them not to disturb it.

They claim that by this action they were unable to reach their mill and could not operate it and have suffered considerable financial loss.

PASSING SCHOOL HOUSE AT HIGH RATE OF SPEED CAUSES FINE

Speeding at the rate of 52 miles per hour on the country roads is bad enough but when a motorcycle rider passes a school house at 49 miles per hour while the children are at play is worse.

At least that is the view Justice Stipp took of it and fined George Mott of Portland, $50, the largest fine possible.

Mott was arrested by Officer Meads near Jennings Lodge Friday and when asked how fast he was traveling said that his speedometer stuck at 45 and he did not know after he passed that mark.

In lieu of paying the fine the man's machine was held.

GIRL COMMITTED

Pearl Metcalf, a 16-year-old girl of this city, was committed to the Louise Home in Portland Thursday. This commitment was on recommendation of the probation officer.

This girl was the main witness in the case against Edward Taylor, who was recently found guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

AMERICAN SOLDIER IS CAPTURED IN CLASH ON MEXICAN BORDER

NOGALES, Ariz., May 8.—American troops of the 10th cavalry and Mexican soldiers clashed early Tuesday near Lochiel, 30 miles east of Nogales, Sonora, it was learned here Wednesday.

One Mexican was severely wounded and one American cavalryman was captured.

The cavalrymen claim their comrade was taken from the American side of the line while he was unarmed.

The Mexican authorities have agreed to return the captive tonight. Feeling among the cavalrymen is running high.

RUTH GARRISON IS FOUND NOT GUILTY OF MURDER CHARGES

SEATTLE, May 9.—Ruth Garrison, 18-year-old girl, who confessed to the poisoning of Mrs. Grace G. Storrs, her rival for the love of D. M. Storrs, on March 18 last, late today was found not guilty because of mental irresponsibility at the time of the crime.

The jury was given the case at 3:12 P. M., and returned with a verdict at 5 o'clock. Under instructions given by the court, the jury returned affirmative answers to three of four points as follows:

Whether the defendant committed the crime charged; whether the jury acquits her because of her insanity or mental irresponsibility at the time of the commission of the crime; whether her insanity or mental irresponsibility continues and exists at the time of the trial.

RACING STARS TO COMPETE IN TACOMA RACES

Tacoma, May 11.—With a galaxy of stars who are without peer in the automobile racing world, and the additional attraction of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, the 1919 program of the Tacoma Speedway Association July 4th, held in conjunction with the Northwest Peace Jubilee, should focus the attention of the entire Pacific Northwest.

Dario Resta, the 1918 world's champion automobile racer and the pilot who has shattered the world's greatest speed records, will vie for the $15,000 sweepstakes on the Tacoma Speedway in July. In 1915, 1916, 1917 and 1918 he occupied the limelight in the racing world and led to defeat the greatest men the racing world produced. His performance on the dangerous track with its myriad curves and hazards at the San Francisco Exposition in 1915, made it apparent to his opponents that Dario Resta has no fear of danger or death. In a driving rainstorm he plunged along the slippery board track at a rate of speed estimated at 87 an hour. Such daring pilots as Oldfield, De Palma, Tetzlaff and Milton feared to follow the apparently speed-mad Italian, and he romped home with the exposition trophy.

Cliff Durant is another feature of the Northwest Peace Jubilee's speedway event in July that should prove almost as great an attraction as Resta. Durant, a big, happy, smiling individual whose interest in the racing events of the country, is not a monetary one, is one of the best Class A drivers in America, according to the official "dope" at Indianapolis. He has been so carefully rated this year that the wise ones at Indianapolis are looking for him to be in the money at the conclusion of the Decoration Day classic there.

Here in 1917, Durant made Earl Cooper's Stutz—the terror of the American speedways for many seasons—look like an ambling one-cylinder affair. He maintained a steady gait until the end of the 100-mile grind, and once in the lead he allowed no other car to distance him.

At the conclusion of the race he pulled a real eclipse by donating to the Red Cross his winnings.

Louis Chevrolet, a fiery Frenchman who is one of the oldest and most consistent speedway performers on either continent, will match wits and daring with Resta and Durant. He will be joined in the fray by Eddie Hearne whose showing in the Santa Monica classic last month and whose repeated wins last year, make him a keen contender.

Ralph Mulford, the last but not the least of the racing stars signed by the Northwest Peace Jubilee, is expected to put the crowning touches on what is undoubtedly the greatest lineup of class ever assembled on any speedway in America.

The races will be piled off in three cantos of 40, 60 and 80 miles. This will give each of the five men an opportunity to win a $3,000 slice of the $15,000 melon.

Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, the greatest ace of all living American aces and the intrepid pilot of the clouds who brought to earth as many as 26 German airplanes, will be an official figure on the Speedway grounds July 4 and will officiate in an official capacity July 2d and 3d, during the Northwest Peace Jubilee celebration.

LIBERIA HAS PRESIDENT

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Charles D. B. King, present secretary of state and head of Liberia's delegation to the peace conference, has been elected president of Liberia.

GOOD PRICES RECEIVED FOR JERSEY CATTLE

The dairy cattle sale held at the Beaver Creek hall May 7, attracted many dairymen, some of whom came from St. Helens, Portland, Chamawa, and other parts of the state. Those entering dairy herds in the sale were R. L. Badger of Beaver Creek, Dr. L. G. Lee of this city, A. D. Gribble, who resides near Canby.

There were about 50 head of pure-blooded Jerseys entered in the sale. The prices for these were not as good as was expected of the owners. "Hedda of Lone Oak" No. 37,521, brought the highest price of any animal in the sale. She was purchased by H. P. Ridinger, of Molalla, who was one of the heaviest buyers of the day. The price paid was $450, and she was owned by A. D. Gribble. Mr. Gribble had nine head, eight of which were listed. All of his animals averaged over $190 each.

G. E. Hamilton, who has purchased the R. L. Badger dairy farm at Beaver Creek, entered three head of Jerseys, averaging $70. Mr. Campbell purchased a number of the Jerseys owned by the Badger dairy farm. Among these were "Beauty of Badger Farm," No. 34,632, $220; also this cow's heifer calf, one week old for $45; "Oxford Rotheheart" No. 43,785, $75; Oxford's Dusky Queen," No. 42,971, $90. The latter was one year old. He also purchased "Hampden's Gray Oxford," junior bull, Fred Wourms, a dairyman near Tualatin, purchased a young bull from the Badger herd, W. F. Fisher of Sandy, was also among those making purchases, and among those being "Sue Ella Fortune," born December 4, 1916, and was among the best in the herd. The Badger herd averaged $98.75. He had 24 head entered in the sale.

In the herd of Dr. L. G. Lee three cows brought $435, and were purchased by W. F. Fischer. The highest priced animal in his herd was "Trill by Sue," which brought $150. W. F. Fischer is a well known dairyman of Sandy, C. E. Bruckman, of Holgate street, Portland, purchased three head from the Lee herd. Burton W. Simmons of Oregon City, Route 3, purchased an animal for $135; Frank Lewis, Hoff, heifer, $50; D. C. Howard, of St. Helens, cow, $80; A. A. Spangler, Oregon City, Route 3, "Koffers Fortune," heifer, $200; Carl Elligen of Stafford, a young calf, $35; George Xexley, Oregon City, calf, $40; Fred N. Rarden, Silverton, heifer, $100; H. H. Samuels, East 82d street, Portland, $70.

The O. I. C. swine placed in the sale by R. L. Badger, brought an average price of $100, while the lowest price for several of the older hogs was $37. The young stuff did not bring as good prices as was expected. "Maggie Jiggs of Badger Farm," an O. I. C., raised on a bottle, was in the sale, and little Maggie was somewhat broken hearted at the thoughts of leaving her good home. Mrs. Badger has been the means of saving the pig's life. The mother pig died a few days before the pigs were born, and "Maggie Jiggs" was one of the lucky few who survived on the cow's milk. This animal brought $25, and the money will be sent to a young soldier in France, a friend of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Badger, whose home is in Idaho. Mr. Welch of Chamawa, secured the animal.

Colonel J. W. Hughes of Forest Grove, assisted by Ben Siddell, of Albany, were the auctioneers, and C. D. Minton of Portland, was sales manager and assisted in the ring.

At noon a dinner was served by J. J. Tobin, manager of the Electric hotel of this city, and Ed Fortune, also of this city. Mrs. Charles Bell of Beaver Creek, presided over the coffee urn.

E. D. Roseman, a graduate of the Oregon Agricultural College, who has specialized in dairying, was among those attending the sale. Mr. Roseman has been assisting Mr. Badger for the past two weeks preparing for the sale.

The departure of the prize Jerseys from the Badger farm has caused a loneliness at that farm, for these animals were given the best of care and attention by their owners. Five animals have been taken back to the farm, the purchaser, Mr. Campbell, whose home has been in Portland, has taken possession and is now ready to go into the dairying industry on a small scale. Mr. and Mrs. Badger will leave within a week for Iowa, where they are to make an extended visit, and may again locate in Clackamas county, at least this is what their many friends in the county believe and hope. They have a host of friends throughout the county, and have been active in Red Cross work, and also in carrying on all drives in the county. They have always been eager to do their bit towards all patriotic affairs.

Pacific Coast Yards To Get Ship Orders

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Pacific coast shipyards will get better than their share of all steel ships when congress has authorized the construction of the new types desired. This is the statement of Chairman Hurley to Senator McNary.

During the interview, Chairman Hurley explained that, because of the efficiency, promptness and general satisfactory business-like manner of handling steel ship construction in the past, he would give the west coast yards every possible ton in contracts when the time came to build the new ones.

MARATHON RACES DROPPED

NEW YORK, May 13.—The New York Sun today published a report from England that next Olympic games, said to be scheduled for Antwerp, September, 1920, will not include a marathon race. The international committee, it was stated, met recently in Lausanne, Switzerland, and laid plans for the next games.

SETTING IN GARDENS PLANTS BORN INDOORS

It is assumed the wide-awake gardener has been busy long before the weather is warm enough to sow any seeds in the open ground; that a window box or hotbed has been provided and that a supply of plants of tomatoes, peppers, early cabbage and eggplant are under way to set in the garden as soon as danger of frost is past.

If plenty of indoor space is available, such crops as snap beans, cucumbers, cantaloupes, and even sweet corn may be started in flower pots, paper bands or berry boxes filled with good soil, and they will be of considerable size by the time the air is warm enough to plant them outdoors. Plants that are grown in the house or in the hotbed must be hardened or and one of these frames is set over each plant or hill to protect it. The glass should be so arranged that it can be partially removed during the warmer part of the day in order to prevent the temperature becoming too high inside the frame. These protectors give good results when used over hills of cucumbers, cantaloupes, and summer squashes as well as over plants of sweet peppers, eggplant, and tomatoes.

Points to Remember

There are a few points in connection with the transplanting of house-grown plants to the garden that are worthy of special attention. In the first place, the plants to be transplanted should be watered a few adapted to outdoor conditions before they are set in the open ground. This is accomplished by gradually exposing them to the open air during the warmer part of the day and later at night, care being taken that they are not caught by a sudden cold snap.

Hardening Early Plants

Where the plants are grown in boxes or trays, the boxes may be carried into the open each day and the plants allowed to become gradually accustomed to the outdoor conditions. If they are in a hotbed or cold frame, the sash or other cover is lifted off during the day and replaced at night. Later the covering is left off entirely; however, it should be kept close at hand to be put on at any time that the weather should turn cold.

Plants set in the open ground may be protected from frost by turning small boxes over them and covering the boxes with a little earth. Old berry boxes are sometimes used for this purpose, but should be covered completely with soil, as the plants will freeze just as readily underneath the exposed boxes as if left in the open without any cover whatever. A good method of protecting plants is by setting a common roofing shingle or a small piece of board at an angle over each plant. These shingles can be set on the side to protect the plant from the sun during the daytime, or they may be placed on the opposite side in order to protect the plants from the wind and allow the sunshine to reach them.

Small Frames Protect

In some cases gardeners have provided small frames, on the top of which are fitted single panes of glass, hours before they are to be handled; this will cause the dirt to adhere to the roots and give them a better start when they are planted out. If the plants are grown in flower pots, in paper bands, or berry boxes, they should be carried to the garden in their containers. Pot-grown plants should be loosened by inverting them and gently knocking the edge of the pot on something solid. The plants then are set with the ball of earth adhering to their roots.

If the plants have been grown in paper bands or berry boxes, the sides of the bands should be slit with a knife and removed as the plants are set. Where the plants are grown in trays or in a hotbed, a knife should be run between the rows, cutting the earth in both directions, and each plant lifted with a cube of earth attached to its roots.

Use Fresh Furrows

The holes or furrows in which the plants are set should not be made until ready to transplant the plants. If made too soon, the soil will dry out and cause the plants to wilt. Under all circumstances, it pays to apply a little water around the roots of each plant as it is set; this causes the soil to form a close contact with the roots of the plant. After the water has soaked into the soil, dry earth should be filled in around the plant and slightly firmed. Plants set in this manner will invariably start without wilting.

It is always a good idea to have a few more plants than are required for filling the space in the garden, in order to replace any that die or are destroyed by insects.

PEACE WITH RUSSIA IS DECLARED NECESSARY FOR QUICK SOLUTION

BERLIN, May 9.—There is only one immediate solution—peace with Russia and the use of Bolshevik troops for Germany," Herr Geisberts, one of the German delegates at Versailles, is quoted by the Neue Zeitung as declaring with reference to the peace terms.

Premier Hirsch of Prussia, speaking in the Prussian national assembly, characterized the peace terms as representing a purely "milled flat" peace which "would mean slavery for the Fatherland and fresh bloodshed for Europe."

"The government appeals to you," he continued, "to close your ranks, preserve your calm and avoid indiscretion in case of dissensions. We are faced by question of to be or not to be. The entire nation must stand behind the government to convert this projected peace of violence into a peace of right."

SECRET TREATY IS ALLEGED BETWEEN JAPAN AND GERMANY

PEKIN, May 9.—Regarding the reported discovery of Japanese-German secret treaty, the Tien Tsin Times publishes a letter from a British correspondent who declared he was traveling on the Suwa Maru, which sailed from Yokohama September 3, Oda being a fellow passenger. On arrival at Victoria September 14, Oda disembarked, presenting to the Canadian emigration officials his credentials as minister plenipotentiary to Sweden. No secret was made as to who Oda was, but, of course, the object of the journey to Stockholm was unsuspected. Publicists are urging that an international investigation be immediately opened. First, it would be easy for the Kolchak government to be requested through the Russian legation at Peking to search the archives and report as to the document; second, it would be easy to conduct an investigation at Stockholm, also at Hamburg; third, it would be easy to start an investigation at Victoria, B. C., tracing the movements of Oda.

MANY VOLUNTEERS FOR SERVICE IN EUROPE MAY BE CALLED SOON

WASHINGTON, May 10.—A call for an additional 50,000 recruits for service with the army of occupation is in prospect when the total of that number asked for by the war department has been obtained. Secretary of War Baker said that he had no definite knowledge as to when the American army of occupation would be entirely withdrawn from Germany. He said he could not confirm reports that this might take place in September or October.

Mr. Baker said the first 1000 recruits obtained for the army of occupation had sailed from New York and it was planned to forward them in consignments of 1000 as rapidly as possible.

At present the army of occupation consists of between 250,000 and 300,000 troops, including supply troops stationed at Antwerp, Rotterdam and other points.

NICARAGUA WARNED BY UNITED STATES NOT TO AID REBELS

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The state department has sent a warning to President Chamorro, of Nicaragua, to preserve that country's neutrality in regard to revolutionary attempts to overthrow the usurping government of Frederico Tinoco, in Costa Rica.

Communication between this country and Costa Rica is interrupted and it is not known definitely how serious is the armed opposition to the Costa Rican president, but it is believed here in the best informed quarters that his administration is nearing its end.

INSPECT FOR OIL

LEBANON, May 9.—John B. Kerr, geologist and mineralogist of San Francisco, representing R. L. Macleay of Portland, is making an inspection of the country around La-combe with a view to boring for oil. Leases were recently secured on considerable land in that part of Linn county.

SEAT SALES $75,000

TOLEDO, O., May 12.—Reservations for seats for the proposed heavyweight title fight between Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey July 4 have aggregated $75,000, according to A. Q
