GOVERNOR ASKED TO SEND GUARDS

EMPLOYEES WOULD HAVE MILITIA AID SPECIAL POLICE IN STRIKE MATTER

MEDIATION BOARD IS NAMED

Mr. Hawley Says Men from Seattle Knew Labor Conditions Here When They Were Hired

Petitions carrying the names of approximately 850 men in the employ of the Oregon City paper mills were sent to Governor Withycombe at Salem yesterday, asking the executive to assign new state military forces to Oregon City for the purpose of suppressing a so-called "campaign of frightfulness" in case the special agents should decide they are not able to handle the matter. Unless all other means of keeping the order that prevails at present fail him, Governor Withycombe will take no action in response to the request. He said yesterday:

"I will not call out the militia unless all other means of enforcing law and order should fail," said the governor. "At present the mayor of Oregon City and the sheriff are co-operating with this office which has special agents on the scene under Captain Keller, who are maintaining order. I am hopeful that the mediation commission appointed by me will succeed in solving the difficulties between employees and employers. Present reports are favorable and conditions of quiet are now prevailing at the mills."

In all, five petitions were sent to Salem and the statements of all of them are the same. After reciting that the employees of the mills struck on October 26, and the positions of the strikers have been satisfactorily filled by the mills, the petitions declare a "campaign of frightfulness" was inaugurated by the strikers.

"Said strikers, realizing that they have lost their strike and that many of them cannot regain their positions, have started a campaign of frightfulness, which campaign the regular police and the sheriff's department, it seems, are unable to combat," read the petitions in part. A mediation board of three members was appointed Saturday by Governor Withycombe to attempt a settlement of strikes. The board is composed of Circuit Judge J. U. Campbell, County Judge H. S. Anderson and District Attorney Gilbert H. Hedges, with Judge Campbell as chairman and Mr. Hedges as secretary.

The board will work for a settlement of the labor trouble that has disrupted the working force of two mills and involved approximately 1500 men, on the basis of Governor Withycombe's statement that "as a patriotic duty the employer and employee should be willing to make any reasonable sacrifice to avert industrial strife when our country is in such great peril."

None of the officials appointed by the governor have taken any part in the strike one way or another and have refused at all times to make any public statements in connection with the affair.

Whatever the plans of the board may be are kept secret for the time being, as none of the members last night would make a statement in connection with their activities.

A petition was circulated in Oregon City Saturday morning calling upon the district attorney to make an investigation into the cases of men who are making threats against others in the city, with a view to settling for all time the activities of both strikers and strike-breakers. On both sides, it is understood, that threats have been made which, if executed, would give the special police here more than their share of work to do. Union men on one hand claim that they have been unable to get District Attorney Gilbert H. Hedges to issue warrants in cases where threats have resulted in violence and strike-breakers say they have been threatened by union men.

In a public statement made Friday, W. P. Hawley, Sr., president and general manager of the Hawley Pulp & Paper company, denied reports that M. A. Peterson, a labor agent, employed 32 laborers for the Hawley mills by telling them that the strike here was over and that the mills controlled not only the situation but the town.

Every man hired by Peterson at Seattle and sent here in a group on last Monday signed a statement which is in the possession of the Hawley company, admitting that they knew of the conditions existing here when they accepted work. The concluding sentence of the statement says:

MAYOR REVIEWS YEAR OF SUCCESS IN CITY

DEPLORES STRIKE EXISTENCE AND CALLS ATTENTION TO LEGAL VICTORIES

(By Mayor E. C. Hackett)
In response to your request for a resume of the city's affairs for the past year, I will say that we've been running along in our usual quiet way without friction of any kind, I am glad to say. This is something unusual, too, for the Oregon City council has been "scrapping" for many, many years; and I need not say that I am proud of the "boys" I conduct for the year just closing. I also wish to thank each and every member for his cordial support in every way.

Our suit for the water-power site at the south end of Main street, I regret to say that we lost in the supreme court. This meant much to Oregon City, as it would have been a means whereby we could protect ourselves against exorbitant prices for lights. We could have furnished the people light, too, at much better rates.

The suit of Christenson against Oregon City and myself as mayor, was ably handled and was won by us with flying colors.

In fact, we've won all suits that were brought against us, save that of the P. R. L. & P. Co., as stated before.

We've made a start on the way toward clearing up the debt hanging over us, and have the money ready to pay the installments as they accrue; though the final "burning of the mortgage" is a long way off, though if we are frugal and careful, we'll finally win.

I'm pained to say that for the last six weeks or so, our fair city has been in the throes of a strike that has been the cause of no little disturbance. This is the first strike of any importance and I hope it may be the last, for these things help the kaiser every minute and surely these boys can't be in league with the kaiser. When our country is in such peril this is no time for strikes to be pulled off. This is the only thing now in the way of the usual progress of the city, and I hope it will soon be cleared up. Except for the debt hanging over us (and we're in shape to clear this up) I believe we have the most substantial little city on the coast. With our substantial manufacturing plants; with a solid farming community back of us; with the finest mountain water in the world; with the ocean breeze wafted to us and the finest climate on Gaea's footstool, what more do we need?

SHIPYARD IS TO OCCUPY NOTED OLD PIONEER SITE

In the age-old days when Clackamas county's paved highways were but immigrant trails, when Oregon City was no more than a hopeful hamlet of hardy souls, clinging desperately to their idea that the great new west was the land of regeneration—the land of promise, there was a ship building plant at Milwaukie—and the primeval forests reached for miles on every side.

On the same site Jacob Kamm and other famous pioneers worked and from it, on a bright Christmas day more than 50 years ago, the old paddle-wheel steamboat, Lot Whitcomb, was launched. Soon new ships will be built there to help America win the war. Work will start in a short time. Articles of incorporation for the Oceanic Shipbuilding Co., have just been filed, with capital stock set at $125,000 and with several prominent Oregon capitalists at the business end.

Wooden ships will be constructed on the five-acre site secured by the company at Milwaukie. The same site was used for the same purpose when Portland was just a clump of fir trees. Present efforts will be directed toward building vessels for the government, but if such plans fail the company has in sight enough business on private contracts to keep its full proposed plant humming.

PROSECUTOR HONORED

District Attorney Gilbert L. Hedges of Clackamas county was yesterday honored with election as president of the Oregon Association of District Attorneys at the convention of that organization in Portland. In the Clackamas county prosecutor his colleagues recognized genuine ability and progressiveness as expressed in Mr. Hedges' untiring work for the maintenance of the law and for his efforts at bringing to justice violators of the prohibition and other statutes. Mr. Hedges is presiding over his first meeting of the association today.

LIVE WIRES GET BUDGET INSIGHT

COUNTY COURT MEMBERS TALK OF ANNUAL EXPENSE ACCOUNT WITH CLUB

WIRES DEBATE INFIRMARY

Tuesday Luncheons Will Keep the Faith With Conservation Program. Judge Speaks

County Judge H. S. Anderson, Commissioner Adam Knight and Roadmaster T. A. Roots were court representatives at the budget meeting of the Live Wires of the Commercial club Tuesday and aided the organization in its discussion of the annual county budget. The main point of issue was the establishment of a county infirmary, which is opposed by the court, and especially Commissioner Knight, although it has been tentatively inserted as a blank item in the 1918 budget.

A committee headed by H. G. Starkweather reported that it would be in the interest of economy to create an infirmary and devote to it some of the $14,000 that has been set aside in the budget for the care of the county poor. The court contended that the establishment would perhaps aid in the systematic care of the feeble, but that it would not serve the interests of economy, inasmuch as half of the cases in the county's charge could not be sent to an infirmary. Judge Anderson pointed out that the care of the poor in this county costs less per person than in counties where infirmaries are maintained.

Judge Anderson favored the creation of a separate fund for the payment of the salary and expenses of the county physician, saying that this official not only was the court's right-hand man in connection with the care of county patients, but that the court depends upon him in many ways in handling destitute cases. From the county poor fund of last year $13,929.39 was paid out and the county was not maintaining an infirmary, the judge said. The addition of that item, then, would necessarily add to the cost of this feature of the county's business.

Inasmuch as here are to be two general elections in the coming year the court and others deemed the county appropriation of $10,000 for election expenses a wise one. This year, it was reported, the county is "in the hole" $7,780.60 because it did not figure sufficient funds for election expenses.

The court called the attention of the Live Wires to the fact that Clackamas county's assessed valuation for the year is $28,850.00, approximately. The meeting made no expression regarding the combination of the positions of county physician and county health officer.

Judge Anderson discussed with the Wires the matter of a new suspension bridge over the Willamette and advised that a sinking fund should be started to make possible a new structure. The Wires indorsed the $1500 budget item for the payment of the county agricultural agent, an appropriation of $500 for the purchase of an automobile for the school supervisor and the $1800 item for the expenses and salary of county commissioners.

The Wires Tuesday amended a recent action in making one luncheon during the month meatless by declaring that every Tuesday should be a meatless day. They will be served in the future with fish or fowl at their luncheons.

QUESTIONNAIRE WILL BE OUT IN NEXT FEW DAYS

On Saturday, if everything goes according to schedule in the meantime, the first five per cent of the draft questionnaires will be mailed to Clackamas county young men by County Clerk Iva Harrington's force. There are approximately 2640 of the new forms for classification of individuals to be mailed out. Beginning on Saturday and each day thereafter for 20 days five per cent of the total number, or about 132 questionnaires, will be mailed.

The plan to be carried out here is that outlined by the war department, and provides, in brief, that five per cent of the total number of questionnaires be mailed out daily for 20 days and answered as soon as possible by the recipient. The questionnaires of draft age will have to answer were fully outlined in The Courier of November 29. In the county clerk's office are high piles of government forms to be handled in connection with the new manner of classifying young men for service in the national army and the entire force in the office is kept on the jump to keep up with the work.

You can blame the cheap looking job of printing on the printer if you want to—and if you do, you will come to The Courier for your next job.

CLERK MAULED IN A SCHOOL BOARD TILT

REV. WETTLAUER SWEARS TO A COMPLAINT AGAINST TWO WHO ASSAULTED HIM

Echoes of a school board feud are ringing in the ears of the good people of the Clackamas district as a meeting of the board of school directors at that place on Friday last, when the Rev. W. H. Wettlaufer, clerk of the board, was battered in an encounter with members of the board.

Warrants were issued on Saturday by Justice of the Peace John N. Sievers for the arrest of B. Sullivan and A. F. Buche, members of the Clackamas school board, charging them with assault and battery. The two men appeared before the court on Tuesday and entered a plea of not guilty and their trial was set by Judge Sievers for Tuesday, December 18. The charges are a direct result of the rough treatment given the Rev. Mr. Wettlaufer during an altercation in the school board meeting.

It is said that an argument started in connection with a teacher's contract which was before the board. At the climax of the battle of words Mr. Wettlaufer was knocked from his seat and mauled about the floor. Mrs. Wettlaufer, who is chairman of the board at Clackamas, interfered when her husband was on the bottom of a fighting pile and the battle stopped. Other members took no part in the affair, it is said, and Miss Florence Stromgren, whose contract was under consideration, disappeared during the fight.

Bad blood has existed between Mr. Wettlaufer and Mr. Sullivan for some months and is said to have been the cause of the trouble. Rev. Mr. Wettlaufer's bonds as clerk of the district have never been approved officially as his election has been contested and the majority of the board had sought to seat C. F. Bergman as clerk.

HANCOCK'S NAME FIRST ON WAR CASUALTY LIST

The United States submits with its casualty list from the French front the name of William E. Hancock, 18th railway engineers, who died in a hospital at the front on December 2, a victim of pneumonia. "Brigadier" Hancock was an Oregon City boy. The young man had lived here for several years and was employed at the Hawley mills until the call to arms interested him and a group of friends and they enlisted with the new engineer regiment.

Hancock, Hal Swafford, Harry Smith, William Folger, Alfred Bigger, Earl Hutchinson and Carl Martin were quartered together in a little French hut when Hancock was stricken. Medical attention at the base hospital failed to aid the young man when his summons came—and his name goes down on government records as Clackamas county's first tribute to the great war. Hancock came into a fortune of $50,000 just before he enlisted. But the thought of service overwhelmed all else and, securing his heritage, he answered the first bugle. His nearest relative is a sister, living at Smith Mills, Ky., which town was also the young man's birthplace.

America, My Own

(Mary Newton Badger)
America, America, Land that gave Freedom birth,
Nations turn longing eyes to thee, thou friend of all the earth!
Thy stainless flag—the Stars and Stripes—floats over land and sea,
Revered above all other flags, emblem of Liberty!
America, America, thou art a mother kind,
People down-trodden and oppressed in thee a refuge find.
And since Autocracy and Might seek to enslave the World,
On Europe's blood-soaked continent, thy banners are unfurled.
America, America, thy manhood, clean and strong,
Goes forth in righteousness and strength, to overthrow the Wrong.
A starving world looks up to thee and of thy bounty sings.
Thy angels of the Red Cross fly with healing in their wings.
America, America, so true, and brave, and free,
Thou art my mother, sweetheart, friend—yea, more than all to me!
And when thou callest to thine own, what'er thy need may be,
I'll answer quickly, "Here am I, Oh, here am I, use me!"

HOW HE DOES CONSERVE!

Senator Dimick Charged With Conservation by Real New Methods

There are two ways to conserve food. One is to save it for the soldiers and the other is to eat it. Some folk have a notion that when they eat they are practicing conservation—for the food that they eat is thus prevented from wasting. A "tail tamarack" from the senatorial hunting ground, one Walter A. Dimick, by name, qualifies for the latter class in the opinion of several members of the Live Wires who watched him in the process of conserving him at the last Live Wire luncheon. The Live Wires are friends for conservation of both

RED CROSS DRIVE TO GET MEMBERS

O. D. EBY NAMED CHAIRMAN OF SPECIAL COUNTY UNIT FOR BIG CAMPAIGN

PLAN IMPORTANT MEETING

12,000 Members Wanted. Captains Named for Districts in All Parts of County

The stage in Clackamas county is set for another big war "drive," this time for the purpose of increasing membership in the Red Cross, and a whirlwind campaign will be waged in the county beginning next Monday and ending with the 27th. O. D. Eby has received appointment as campaign manager for the drive and the county has been designated as a separate and distinct unit for the occasion.

All citizens have been invited to attend a big meeting to be held at the Commercial club in this city on Saturday morning at 11 o'clock and aid in laying plans for the drive. To this end letters have been sent to every school district in the county in which each district is designated as a unit and a campaign captain is appointed.

The meeting on Saturday will be devoted to a full explanation of the drive and literature will be distributed among the district captains and they will be started upon the work of organizing their several districts to secure membership. It is planned that Clackamas county shall enlist 12,000 men and women for the Red Cross society for 1918. The fee for membership has been set at $1.00 and each person becoming a member will be entitled to a membership certificate.

Chairman O. D. Eby said yesterday:

"Clackamas county people are organizing in their local communities and are earnestly employed in the Red Cross work and it is believed that they will respond instantly to this membership request."

"The expense to each individual is small but taken as a whole it will raise a large sum of money. Clackamas county has responded nobly in the past to every request made on the part of the government for the support of our nation in the contest against autocracy and for the freedom of the world, and the management of this campaign is looking forward to a spontaneous response to the request of the Red Cross organization that the coming Christmas shall be one of self sacrifice of our people to the great Red Cross work."

The great effort will be for $1.00 memberships but in addition to this the following memberships are provided for any who may wish them: Subscribing or magazine memberships, $2.00; contributing member, $5.00; sustaining member, $10.00. All memberships over the $1.00 one include also a subscription to the Red Cross magazine by which it is hoped to coordinate all Red Cross activities.

MAY APPOINT WOMEN ON ELECTION BOARD

SALARIES WOULD BE TURNED TO USES OF RED CROSS BY VOLUNTEER CLERKS

Clackamas county election booths may be entirely in charge of women the coming year as a result of the campaign launched Monday to have the money paid to judges and clerks of election turned over to the Red Cross. Mrs. Pettinger, of Oswego, started the campaign when she appeared in County Clerk Harrington's office and asked that official why such a thing could not be done. Miss Harrington replied that it could, and was of the opinion that the easiest way to handle the matter was to secure volunteers among the women for appointment to the several posts.

The plan is to get women throughout the county to volunteer for the duties of judges and clerks. They will be appointed by the clerk and will be paid at the usual scale, and will turn over the proceeds to the Red Cross fund. Inasmuch as there are 81 voting precincts in the county and two judges and three clerks constitute a single board, with most precincts demanding double boards, there would accrue at once a Red Cross fund amounting to approximately $2500. With day and night boards at work in each precinct for two elections to be held during the coming year would double the fund, making a total close to $5000. County Clerk Harrington will co-operate with Mrs. Pettinger and other Red Cross workers to carry the plans out successfully.

SIX OREGON CITY BOYS JOIN NAVY IN ONE WEEK

Oregon City contributed six young men all in a bunch to the fighting forces of Uncle Sam through the navy recruiting office in Portland this week. Some of them have already started for the training station at Goat Island, in San Francisco bay, and others of the group will leave this evening.

The recruits are Ernest T. Mass, Jr., Milton Noble, Robert Meyers, W. R. Harrison, Elmer Russell and Raleigh Forsberg. The boys are all well-known in Oregon City by virtue of their respective activities, including those in which several of them engaged while students at the Oregon City high school. All are counted as personal friends of one another and it was largely this friendship that caused the six to enlist for service at the same time. Milton Noble left a position in the Bank of Commerce to go to war, and W. R. Harrison quit the Court House barber shop for the same reason. This pair left on Tuesday evening. Mass, Russell, Meyers and probably Forsberg, will go to San Francisco together this evening.

FEW VOTES ORGANIZE A NEW WATER DISTRICT

By a majority of 27 votes in favor of the plan, a water district was formed Monday at a special election of voters including the communities of Oak Grove, Jennings Lodge, Milwaukie Heights and Concord. The vote was 174 to 147. Jennings Lodge was the only community that did not support the measure heartily, there being a vote of 117 against and 36 for in that precinct. The next problem before the voters will be authority to issue bonds to cover the cost of the contemplated work.

The district embraces all the area from Gladstone to Milwaukie city limits, between the Willamette river and the hills east of the Outfield road, except a portion around the open air sanitarium near Milwaukie, and the Hollowell tract west of Gladstone. At the election creating the district, John F. Risley, H. G. Starkweather and J. Dean Butler were elected commissioners, as against W. I. Blinstone, John Overbach and William Jacobs.

The district is permitted, if a majority of its voters so decide, to authorize bonds up to 10 per cent of the valuation to secure the water, which includes the cost of a distribution system. This is 10 per cent includes preliminary costs as well, and the commissioners just elected express their idea that 1 per cent will cover the cost of the latter, leaving 9 per cent for the construction of a distribution system.

The water supply may come from the Bull Run system of the city of Portland, and it is also understood that the water commissioners will negotiate with the Oregon City and West Linn water commissioners as well, with a view to connecting with the south fork of the Clackamas system.

Father Is Dead

W. T. Wright, father of Will Wright, president of the Bank of Oregon City and former state bank superintendent, died at his home in Union county on Tuesday. He was long prominent in eastern Oregon life and was the founder of the first bank in the famous old town of Union. Will Wright, whose home is at Portland, hurried to Union upon receipt of news of the death.

TELLS HARDSHIPS OF "SOURDOUGHS"

BROWN RECITES SOME HANDICAPS ALASKAN PROSPECTORS MEET AND FIGHT

TEMPERATURE BELOW ZERO

Experience Is Teacher. Crazy Men Produced by Solitude and Privations

(M. J. Brown)
Alaska, home of the tin can and dog; a waste of snow and ice; the graveyard of ambition; a by-word for hell; home of the famed double-cross.

These and hundreds more like them are printed and sung in the North Land. There have been such hardships, such disappointments and such suffering that there are few to find things to sing praises of. But this isn't to be a moralism. It is rather to tell you of some of the interesting expedients the hardships of the cold land teach those who live with her.

Where the "sour doughs" beat the newcomers to it is on the long prospecting hikes or stamped races to new strikes. Here is where experience counts.

News will come into a Yukon town that a strike has been made far back in the hills and of course that means a race of about everybody in the town who can raise a grub stake or a dog.

The movies picture these men as starting on foot, pulling on their coats as they run, and other rank foolishness. The slowest and best prepared musher is the one who will stake first, and the experienced men know it.

So instead of harnessing the dogs and mushing out in ten minutes after the news, the "sour doughs" begin to prepare an outfit, one they can go through on with the least loss of time.

Beans will be boiled before the start. In a mushing race to a gold strike, the camps are where night finds the men, often where wood is very scarce and where a few twigs must suffice for the fire.

The beans are not boiled soft, just enough to cook them through, then they are spread out and allowed to freeze. After they are frozen, they are put in bags and they are as separate as dry beans.

A tenderfoot would boil them and let them freeze solid and the tenderfoot might just as well throw them away and cook fresh ones so far as time saving goes. Fry thawing out a bucket of solidly frozen beans—or rather don't try it.

Same with meat. The old timer will cut his bacon or bear meat in slices, let it freeze solid in slices and then pack it into one package. The "cheechako" will cut it in slices and let it freeze together and he might better have never sliced it, for frozen together they are like a solid chunk of ice. A trail follower will never let his meat slices freeze together but once, for if he is going fast he will not have any meat to eat. In a hot frying pan frozen meat will burn on one side and be raw on the other.

A mushing outfit can be no stronger than its grub outfit, and this is the main reason why there are thousands of square miles in the big North territory that have never been prospected and thousands of acres that have never had a human foot on them.

The river towns are the supply base—and there are no others. Let a man strike north from the Yukon anywhere in the interior of Alaska and he knows that he will never get another ounce of store provisions until he comes back to that town. Ahead of him are no posts, settlements, supplies or even Indian villages—for the Indians and Eskimos invariably live along the streams.

So when prospectors start out they must only go as far as half their food supply will carry them—and even this limit is a long chance. When the grub is half exhausted, they must at once turn back, and if on the back trail severe blizzards should stop them, sickness or accident should delay, then the white death wins out again.

So a gold hunter in Alaska is very much like a submarine, he can only get so far from his supply base and live. Many a prospector starts out for a certain locality and he has to beat it back the minute he gets there—or starve.

Terrible blizzards often overtake mushers on these trips, storms that neither man nor dog can face, and then one must get in and stay in until it is over, or die.

The thermometer during mid-winter will often go 80 degrees and more below zero, and Alaskan thermometers are made the reverse of state recorders, the zero mark being more than half way up the glass so the mercury will have room enough to run down. In an ordinary ther-
