

SAM BLODGETT LOST THE TRAIL IN A POOR HOUSE

A news dispatch from Butte, Mont., says Sam Blodgett, who fought with Custer and Kit Carson, is dead today at the age of 83 years. He was with Custer in the Seven Day battle with the Indians on the Little Army river and for years was one of the best known government scouts in the west. He died in the poor house.

"He was with Custer." He was "one of the best known government scouts in the west."

To have been "with Custer" and "one of the best known government scouts in the west" was participation in the great romance of America. The great story of it all has never been written. It was the irrepressible conflict of the races. It began on the greatest scale in history when the tiny caravels of Columbus sailed westward. Doubtless it was destiny for the pale skinned people to submerge the Sitting Bulls and the Crazy Horses as a means of spreading civilization. At any rate, inch by inch, mile by mile, the red man was crowded out of his broad domain and out of the haunts he had roomed for generations, to make room for frontier homes and the oncoming tide of white settlements.

We assure ourselves that the white man's schoolhouse was better for the continent than the red man's tepee and tomahawk. We argue that the white man's church and hospital and use of the land were better and higher purposes than the red man's hunting knife, war dance and acres unused except in the chase or in conflict.

And out of this inevitable struggle of the races came Custer and the scouts and the half told annals of white against red over the uncharted reaches of the wild free west.

And it was 20 to one by which in the climax of this two-century race conflict that the reds outnumbered the whites. The historic ridge where the yellow-headed Custer fell. There Indian cunning was at its best and its toll upon white life more merciless.

With 11 companies of cavalry, 600 men, Custer was sent to the Little Big Horn to await a junction with other white regiments. His men were as gallant as their fearless leader, but 20 to one was an impossible task for flesh and blood and rain-in-the-face had his revenge. Not one of the 260 who charged with Custer lived.

The chivalry of arms runs through the annals of an advancing conqueror against a vanishing race. But, the struggle is ended now and there are no more rides "with Custer," no more work for "the best known scouts in the west."

So Sam Blodgett "who fought with Custer," is dead, and it was in a poorhouse that the gallant old scout lost the trail.—Journal.

GREAT OLD NOME IS ONLY A MEMORY

lengths. These he placed in his hand and ordered me to draw. I drew. Then he went the rounds, and one of the bunch was declared "it"—having drawn the longest straw. I was then enlightened I had a perfectly good cocktail wished onto me and to "fall in."

I was too near the Eskimo town to turn back, so I flatly refused to drill, telling the one who was called "Parson," to leave me one coming, and when I bolted down the beach he threw a half dollar at me. "If you won't drink, spend the four bits for a bath," he said.

Nome is the reverse of any mining town in Alaska, barring possibly Juneau, for its mining is all done in the summer time instead of winter.

The placer mining that made this north town a familiar name over the world has played out. No longer do gold-crazed men wash out great fortunes from the sand beach. Those days have ticked by. Today the dredges and hydraulic outfits take care of what gold is left around Nome, and they can only operate in the summer—when there is water.

The placer diggers have been panned out, worked clean, "gone bust." A few yet rock and cradle back on the second beach but the gold is practically exhausted.

When the big rush was on at Nome there were no 20-acre claims staked—they were 20 feet. The beach was no man's land, hence there could not be any regularly registered claims, but there was an unwritten law a claim was 20 feet front on the ocean, and ropes were the divisions. And a man who would not recognize these regulations didn't have time to let his family know how he died.

The purser on the boat coming home—an old-timer on the run—told me that two waiters went ashore one afternoon and panned out $800 apiece. The only scheme the boat companies could devise to keep the help from leaving the ships was to sign them for a return trip from Seattle and forbid any tug or row boat coming near the vessel while she was at anchor. And even then some of the crew would risk death in a two-mile swim at night.

Nome was a great old camp in those days. There was no post office there and mail was mushed in from Valdez, 1500 miles, to St. Michael, 110 miles from Nome, and Indians would bring the letters from St. Michael at $5 apiece.

I was talking with an old-timer and told him I was from Oregon.

"Oregon! Why this town used to be full of the web-footers. Did you ever know Ben Olcott? I hear he is some big gun down there now. I knew him in '94 when he mushed from Nome to Fairbanks, over a thousand miles." And when I told him Olcott was secretary of state in Oregon he remarked: "He had sense enough to go out before his dough soured."

There is not a dollar's worth of fire insurance in Nome. No company will take any. Too big risks. There is not a wooden building that is level—even the Masonic temple is not strictly level or on the square. This summer the water will run out of the kitchen sink all right, and next summer it won't, and the few bath tubs in the city have to be jacked up or down, depending on which end of the house the frost did the most heaving.

Sixteen cans of water for one dollar and Alaska going dry January 1. Do you wonder the people are leaving Alaska? Soft coal was $25 a ton and going up a little higher every time the Nugget printed a dispatch that a submarine had sunk another boat. The average cost of heating a house at this price was $50 a month. Party line phones were $10 per month and electric lights $5 apiece per month. The Pioneer Mining company brings its water 70 miles through pipes. Some of the smaller concerns, which have rich ground but no water, build fences to catch snow, which melts in the summer and can be used for sluicing. But a fellow might have to wait four or five years for the fickle winds to blow the snow into particular trap.

Everything is a chance, and a big chance in Alaska. When things come they break in big bunches, but they are a long time coming to the 90 and 9.

"Where did this beach gold come from?" I asked a miner. "Washed down from the hills," he replied. The same question to another miner got this answer, "Washed in by the ocean." Now you guess.

There are three beaches at Nome, the present water front, one a mile or two back, and one four or five miles back, from which it is plainly evident that in the ages past glacial and volcanic actions have crowded the ocean back. Rich ground was found on all these beaches.

In 1913 a great storm or tidal wave, ruined the present beach by washing out or burying the gold-bearing sand, and since that time Nome has steadily gone down. The hydraulics and dredges will operate for years to come yet, but they do not employ much help and their season of operation is so short that there are not enough assets to keep Nome a live one. This mining town is following Dawson—it will soon be a dead one, a once-waser.

The life of the greater population of Nome during the long winter is sleeping days and reading nights, and the one great sport is dog racing.

For the first time on the trip of about 2200 miles down the Yukon I found my old friends, nickles and dimes, at Nome, and I went into a hip pocket depository and fished out a handful that were demonized at Skagway. Practically "outside" prices prevail in Nome, with the exception of the "hash houses." A steak costs a dollar there.

Moving pictures are the main source of entertainment in the north city and considering how the town is cut off from the world for eight or nine months the shows are good. The reels must be ordered and delivered nine months ahead.

There may be a few horses on the job around the mining outfits, but I did not see them. The market price of hay was $100 a ton in August and oats $90. The price of horse board was $1.50 per day, so you may be sure there were not many saddle ponies on the streets.

When winter sets in in Nome, in October, the "Radiator Club" is reorganized. The radiator reduces its room rates much faster than Hoover does bread prices, in fact, they go down with a jar. The hotel must stay open and the management figures that it might better have the rooms putting $10 a month each in the cash register than to have them empty, so those who have to stay in for the winter get heated rooms at this bargain day rate and they are then members of the "Radiator Club," with full privilege to sit in the big lobby with their feet on the radiator at ten bucks per until the first ocean steamer whistles in the spring and then the rates take a jump that would make the shoe trust get off the trail.

Raffles are a big graft in all the Alaska towns, and the tourists fall for them. Handsome furs, carved ivory and many other things are worked to a finish. The trouble is the drawings do not take place until the tourists have left, and as the numbers are only sold to the visitors, the chances are they never take place.

One fellow braced me to take a dollar chance on five partially melted $20 gold pieces. The song he sang was a fire in his home; the five gold pieces he had saved to take his family outside; the stores would not give him only half the money value of the coins and he had not time to send them to the mint and get returns in time to get out on the last boat.

The coins were genuine and had been through a fire. They had melted just enough to stick together. Afterwards a waiter in the beany told me these coins were worn smooth in the raffle game; that the fire had happened three years before and many a man had made a nice little stake selling tickets for a drawing that would take place about the time when Alaska went back into the torrid climate.

I have a perfectly good lottery number that I will sell at greatly reduced rates.

And now I will close with a little blue music. Some of these days a big fire will wipe out Nome, and then about all that will be rebuilt will be the postoffice. Like all Alaska towns she is on the mat, waiting for the count.

Next week I am going to write about the wonderful dogs of Alaska and the big part they play in the activities of the North Land.

LADS KILL MATE IN SHAM BATTLE

ed "no man's land," and had put up three flags to warn one another that they were out of ammunition or that they had to pause for some other reason.

When Cecil Shaw, the smallest lad, saw that La Doux had dropped from behind the tree where he was shielded from the bullets of the others, he called to them to stop shooting, exclaiming, "you have killed Leslie." The older boys returned a single shot rifle to the hands of the dead boy, put his hat upon his head and prepared a story to tell when they got home. It was to be told that Leslie had taken ill and had returned home, they going on toward Grouse mountain. When the body was found it would be in such a condition, the lads thought, that it would be supposed La Doux had killed himself. The Shaw boy says he was "scouting" in "no man's land" when La Doux was killed. The dead was an uncle of Cecil Green, who lived with the former's father, J. A. LaDoux, at Parkplace. Mr. LaDoux testified that Green had maintained the same story about the affair during search of the woods about Parkplace that lasted most of the night. Not until Sheriff Wilson confronted the boy on Sunday did he confess to the truth. The jury called by Acting Coroner Sievers was made up of George Hall, Frank Doty, R. F. Woodward, E. L. Johnson, S. O. Dillman and George Greene.

Their verdict was that La Doux, aged 14, had died as a result of the wound inflicted by a gun either in the hands of Cecil Green or Lake Smith.

tal average annual rainfall of this section.

The Hawley Pulp & Paper Co. completely closed its big mills at noon Wednesday when the high water so diminished the water power supply that operation was no longer possible. Thus far no damage has been done to the Hawley company's plant, but the water is getting into the basement of the older structures and will soon be covering belts on the machines. The power station in the river is high enough out of the water to be safe from any stage the river is apt to reach. The power supply of the company, chiefly from the water, cannot be used until the river height goes down materially.

The Crown-Willamette Co., Tuesday night closed down its wood mill because of the high water and the pulp mills ceased operations early Wednesday morning. The paper mill is running as usual and will not be affected unless the water comes a good bit higher than it is at present. No water has entered the buildings of the company and no damage has been done.

The government locks on the west side are idle and boats are not permitted to pass through them. The canal gates have been opened to allow the water to pass through. Seabeca is isolated from the county seat because of the condition of roads, and rural mail service in many parts of the county is crippled.

RAINS DO HEAVY DAMAGE AND TEAR OUT A BRIDGE

Unusually heavy and continuous rains this week have put thousands of acres in the Willamette valley under water, washed out bridges and made all streams raging torrents. A heavy wind Monday and Tuesday added to the damage in some districts.

Hundreds of acres in Marion, Linn and Lane counties were made great shallow lakes by the storm. Train service in several districts was interrupted. The Willamette began rising soon after the heavy rain began and still is rising. Several farms along the river in the southern part of the county are partially flooded.

The Clackamas river, always first to show the effect of a heavy rain, was higher than it had been for many months by Monday night. Early Tuesday one of the piers of the county bridge at Parkplace was washed out. The county will probably repair the bridge temporarily as soon as the heavy rain ends. Portland-Oregon City traffic went by Bakers bridge or the west side road.

Milk creek, the Sandy river, the upper forks of the Clackamas and other mountain streams were reported far out of their banks Wednesday and Thursday. The south fork pipeline was carefully watched and so far has not been damaged. Rain in the mountains was reported unusually heavy.

H. N. Everhart Resigns

The Molalla city council held the regular meeting last week when H. N. Everhart resigned from the position of city recorder, which he has held for several years. George Blatchford was appointed to take his place and will take office the first of the year.

ROY MATTOON WRITES A FINE LETTER FROM EAST

In an interesting letter to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mattoon, Roy Mattoon, clarinet player in the 162d infantry band, formerly the 3d Oregon, tells of life in Camp Mills, Long Island, where the Oregon boys were stationed. Mr. Mattoon sheds a little light upon the conditions which are said to have brought suffering to the troops on Long Island, and praises the home papers. The letter sent to The Courier by Mr. and Mrs. Mattoon reads:

Long Island, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1917. Dear folks: I want to thank you so much for two letters and three bundles of papers this week. It is certainly good of you to send us the home papers. As there are five Oregon City boys in my tent, the papers go the rounds. Of course, we have the New York papers every day in camp but they don't take the place of the home news. With your letters and papers coming regularly we keep pretty well posted on what happens in old Oregon.

We have been in New York often enough by now to know that it is some city, believe me. And I believe I have almost had my fill of sight-seeing, well as I like to travel. Osborn and I have heard the symphony orchestra and have seen the grand opera at the Winter Garden theater. (By the way, it was in this opera house that Harry Thaw killed Stanford White.) We also took our first ride on the elevated railway and subway. Between the two is the street car line.

We also visited Carl Fischer's music store. I had to get some reeds and we went right up to the clarinet work shop. Gee! It certainly is some place. Clarinets stacked from the floor to the ceiling. You know they make them right here. I had quite a chat with one of the makers; he reminded me so much of Mr. Kohler of Oregon City. I have heard some lovely music here and if nothing happens to me I am coming back to New York to study after the war. Just to show you the good impression our band made at Concord, N. C., I received a big box of cake and candy from there recently. We band boys don't have to do kitchen duty any more. There are special men for that work, which makes it fine for us.

Our work consists of rehearsal from 8 to 11 forenoon and guard mount or battalion parade of afternoons. When the weather is favorable we have lots of spectators. We are to have four of the best musicians from the Washington D. C. band. The government just issued us eight more dandy instruments, six cornets and two saxophones. We also have 500 reeds coming, so we clarinet players don't have to buy our own reeds any more.

Now about the Y. M. C. A. work. I want to tell you it is the best thing ever to we soldier boys. It certainly is worthy of your support. The Red Cross also is doing great work and we could not get along without either. I have just received, through the Red Cross I guess, one sweater, a muffler and mittens, all very nice. With the sweater, helmet, mittens and socks that I just got from you folks I am equipped for any kind of weather. Just now it is very cold here, but I am not suffering and feel fine and dandy.

This Thanksgiving we supposed we were going to get left when it came to a dinner. But not so. Even if turkey did come high here in New York. Shall I tell you what we feasted on? Turkey and cranberries, sweet and Irish potatoes, squash, sauce, cake, bananas and oranges. It tasted good but nothing like the dinners at home. I had an invitation and a pass to Brooklyn to dine with a family but concluded to stay at camp. In the afternoon we went to Jamaica to a show. Jamaica is a town about the size of Oregon City or larger. It has two shows with splendid 12 piece orchestras.

I still enjoy military life and think every young man should give it a try. My experience is worth $1000 to me, alright. Be sure to write often for if there is anything we boys like it is more letters. Give my regards to all inquiring friends. Your loving son,

ROY MATTOON.

MOUNT PLEASANT

(Too Late for Regular Page) We received our Christmas number of The Courier and are well pleased with it. It deserves lots of credit for itself and for Oregon City. Who can complain with our nice warm rain when we read of the cold and freezing weather our eastern brothers have.

Charles Williamson has sold his farm. At present he is somewhat undecided as to his future location. Arthur Osborn has been appointed mail carrier in Oregon City.

Mrs. A. E. King spent the weekend in Portland, the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Forbush Pratt.

Mrs. Leila Brown of Portland, formerly Miss Leila Hiatt, is visiting with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hiatt.

We are pleased to hear of the marriage of Everhard Hiatt to Miss Chalmers of Forest Grove. Mr. Hiatt was graduated from O. A. C. at Corvallis. He came home and went into the poultry business and made good. We are proud of a man who takes up a business for himself. After a short honeymoon they will be home looking after the poultry business.

Mrs. Jennie Niles, whose three sons have gone to war, will make her home with the W. B. Lawton family.

The days are pretty short and the mud pretty deep. We will appreciate a change in both.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruening's son, from Omaha, Neb., will make them a visit over the holidays. They expect to have a family reunion on Christmas.

Charles Holmes just sold two pigs to the Union Meat Co., and received $146. Hard to beat.

SOUTH HIGHLAND

(Too Late for Regular Page) A regular old fashioned community Christmas tree and entertainment is now being arranged, to take place Monday evening, December 24 in the M. E. church, to which all children and parents are invited. The affair will be directly in charge of Miss Ethel Mason, our teacher. Mrs. Ingle is very ill with pneumonia.

Mr. Griffith, who has been working for Joe Wallace the past month, returned to his home in Oregon City Friday.

Archie Rath is visiting his father, who is working at the paper mills. Miss Tillie Martin and brother, Albert, were Oregon City visitors last week.

Mrs. McGary and sister, Miss Ingle, who are teaching at Portland were called home last Friday on account of the serious illness of their mother.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Kandle visited with Mr. and Mrs. August Rakel at Canemah Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. McNaught were visitors at Oregon City Saturday.

We have certainly had our share of rain the past two weeks. John Schram was in Beaver Creek Saturday.

Mrs. B. Rambo and son called on Mrs. C. Kandle Monday afternoon.

F. Cornwell went to Portland Monday.

August and Herman Rakel are visiting at the home of M. E. Kandle.

Re. R. B. Mason and daughter were Oregon City visitors Saturday. The Alberta school will have a "Shadow" social and Miss Anna Mayfield will be the leading lady in "Polly of the Circus," Saturday, December 22 at 8 o'clock. Ladies bring lunches and the boys will buy your shadows.

TWILIGHT

(Too Late for Regular Page)

Mr. and Mrs. Maynach did some Christmas shopping in Portland Saturday.

R. J. Werner, our county agent, accompanied by a Corvallis expert, endeavored to enlighten a few of our people on the pruning subject Monday afternoon. The day was one of the stormiest of the season and as a result the demonstration was given inside, making it less interesting than it otherwise would have been.

The past week has been unusually stormy, the rainfall being unprecedented for a given length of time. Dry wells are profuse in supply and ravines are full of water as a result. Much wind prevailed throughout the storm period.

Both Mrs. Nash and Mrs. Spiger are still much distressed in a health sense, and have the sympathy of many friends in the community.

The community is to enjoy an old fashioned watch service New Year's eve, but, instead of the usual custom, entertainment will consist of various amusements, including cards, "cats" and neighborhood gossip. A sort of get-together affair. It is being engineered by Mr. Weisenbeck.

SINNOTT RETURNS

Popular Newspaper Man Accepts Place With Big News Agency

Phillip J. Sinnott, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Sinnott, of this city, has been appointed manager of the northwest bureau of the United Press associations with offices in Portland. He worked for the United Press in San Francisco and Los Angeles and later for the Los Angeles Tribune. The United Press sent him to Portland from Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Sinnott have made several trips to Oregon City within the last week to visit his parents. Sinnott formerly worked on both the local papers.

Sinnott succeeds F. W. McKech-nie, formerly of the Enterprise, who has enlisted in the navy as a radio electrician, landsman.

Examination Announced

The U. S. Civil Service commission announced that a male clerk-carrier examination will be held at Oregon City on January 12 to establish an eligible register from which selection may be made to fill vacancies as they occur in the position of clerk and carrier at the Oregon City post office. Men only will be admitted to this examination. Application blanks and information may be obtained from William B. Howell, local secretary, at the post office.

CANEMAH GIRL HURT
Automobile Runs Over Anna Jurneck on Streets of Portland
Anna Jurneck, aged 17, of Canemah, a student at Behnke-Walker business college, Portland, was severely injured in that city on Wednesday when a truck driven by Warren Hansen for the Oregon Creamery, ran over her.

The girl was crossing the street and did not see the machine until it was nearly upon her. She attempted to dodge, but was unsuccessful, and one of the wheels passed over her chest. A Multnomah county official picked the girl up and carried her to the Emergency hospital. She was later removed to St. Vincent's hospital, where it was reported that she was suffering a bruised side and possible internal injuries.
