PROPOSE PLANS FOR CITY'S MANAGEMENT

COUNCIL WILL CARRY FIGHT ON ASSESSMENT TO HIGHEST COURT IN STATE

Oregon City may be asked to accept a commission form of municipal government with a city manager in place of a mayor and either three or five councilmen-at-large elected. This was the meat of a discussion held in the council chambers by the city administration on Wednesday evening.

The plan is yet in embryonic stages and may go in the files indefinitely even after the proposition has been up for discussion. Some prompt action must be taken one way or another, it is pointed out, since the city council has ordered a complete revision of its charter to accord with the laws manufactured by the last legislative sessions at Salem.

According to the tentative outline of the plan under discussion by council members, voters would elect a group of councilmen without regard to their residence within any particular ward. This group would include some number of men as three, or five. As commissioners these men would elect a city manager from their own number or from the outside the commission to be the direct executive head of the municipal government.

Similar government prevails in many cities throughout the United States and in many cases has proved to be vastly more efficient than the councilmanic system, considered antiquated. From the experience of other cities it appears that the success of the city manager idea depends to a great extent upon the particular man who becomes manager. The commissioners would be heads of sub-divisions in the administration of affairs. What may result from the council's discussion remains to be told by that body.

At its meeting last evening the council instructed City Prosecutor George L. Story to carry the fight from the Tenth street sewer district assessment to the highest court if necessary. C. H. Dye, with his own property and that of neighbors assessed, has filed and action against the city in which he asks that the council be restrained from collecting the assessment on his property. The legality of the assessment is in question and will be settled in the circuit court. Should the city gain a verdict it will follow Mr. Dye to the supreme court if he continues the litigation and if the city loses it will undoubtedly petition for a supreme court hearing, it is understood.

GOVERNOR RECALLS HIS SPECIAL OVERSEER HERE

Captain Joe Keller, state parole officer, who has been in charge of a corps of special state police on strike duty here, was relieved last week by Governor Withycombe and four of the special police were recalled at the same time. It is understood here that Captain Keller's services are needed at Salem. R. L. Morelock was one of the four special officers to be relieved and also returned to Salem. During the time Captain Keller has been in charge here there has been no violence of any kind and he has had the hearty support of all factions in his work. Governor Withycombe warned local officials that they would be held responsible for the strict preservation of order in the city.

Soon after Captain Keller left, however, Gilbert Coffey led a small tilt against strikebreakers named Slavin and Murray. No great damage was done on either side of the resulting fist fights before Gus Schuebel separated the fighters and took them to the labor temple. There Coffey's appearance in court was assured in case a warrant is issued for him.

It developed that previous to the time when Captain Keller assumed charge of the special agents they were being operated under the direction of detectives and were being used to break up the strike. Captain Keller objected to this policy and, after assuming charge, issued instructions that the special agents were only to enforce the law and prevent violations, and it is said during the several weeks he was at Oregon City, that no trouble was encountered and no arrests were made.

Buy Thrift Stamps
"Apply the interest from your Liberty bonds to the purchase of Government Thrift stamps." This suggestion was advanced by President William Sproule to all officers and employees of the Southern Pacific. The suggestion came in the form of a circular which is to be widely distributed. Announcement is made that the company will offer the security of its own vaults to all employees who desire to protect their Liberty bonds and will collect in their behalf the interest as it accrues and either remit same or invest it in government savings stamps as the owner desires. All employees are urged to buy thrift stamps and urge other employees to purchase these securities which are described as "a remarkable opportunity to save small amounts on favorable terms."

BUDGET MEETING A MILD SESSION

DR. MOUNT INJECTS A HEATED ARGUMENT ABOUT WORK OF COMMISSION

TAXPAYERS APPROVE ITEMS

Decline Action on Infirmary for County and Retain Service of Agricultural Agent

Dr. Hugh S. Mount, half owner of the Ganong property at Canemah said to have been seriously damaged by the work on the Pacific highway ordered by the state highway commission, on Saturday injected a sensational flavor into the annual county budget meeting with an outspoken denunciation of the commission and its methods. Dr. Mount and others have a suit pending against the commissioners as individuals for $7500, the estimated extent of damages to the Ganong property.

Mild arguments marked the acceptance by a great many taxpayers of the annual county budget. Opposition to the employment of a county agricultural agent was the first voiced. This feature of the budget was short-lived and the $1500 item for the agent's hire was passed by a heavy majority. The arguments against the agent's hire were based upon the theory that the farmers of the county did not need scientific effort in their affairs. The item covering the cost of an automobile for the county school supervisor failed to carry and an item for the hire of a veterinarian was also defeated. The matter of maintaining a county infirmary was left in the hands of the county court and was thereby defeated, since the court has expressed itself against the appropriation.

An important feature of the meeting Saturday was the voting of a quarter-mill tax to start a sinking fund for a new suspension bridge across the Willamette at this city. County office budgets were passed, with the addition of $300, provided for increased salaries for deputies in several offices. An appropriation of $500 for county fairs was approved and an additional appropriation of the same amount was voted on behalf of the eastern Clackamas fair, held annually at Estacada. Estacada had a large and united delegation at the meeting.

Taxpayers approved an apportioned road fund of $201,143; bridges and culverts, $14,368; hard-surfacing, $14,368, and state co-operative road work, $28,745.

In his attack upon the state highway commission Dr. H. S. Mount became vitriolic. He asked that the court deduct a sufficient sum from the item for state road co-operative work to lay out a new route for the Pacific highway through Canemah. This, the court told the doctor, would not be possible, since the matter was entirely in the hands of the commissioners. Dr. Mount charged County Commissioners Procter and Knight with being in league with the state commission in its work.

Later Commissioner Knight took up cudgels against Dr. Mount and struck into a vigorous attack upon the ambitions of the Ganong property owners. He suggested that the only recourse they could expect for the damage that has been done to their property is through the suit against the state commissioners for $7500.

SCHOOL CLOSURES AND THE PUPILS ATTEND FUNERAL

The Parkplace school closed Thursday out of respect to the memory of Leslie LaDoux, 14-year-old pupil at that institution, who was killed by playmates in a sham battle last Saturday. Many of the children and a great number of friends of the family attended the funeral of the boy, conducted from the Parkplace Congregational church by the Rev. H. N. Smith, of Jennings Lodge. The pupils who attended the funeral and the Boy Scouts were present as organizations. Several selections at the services were sung by Miss Marie Holmes, Mrs. W. A. Holmes, Miss Mary Lucas, Frank Lucas and Clarence Brunner. The body was buried in Clackamas cemetery.

DR. DYOTT DEAD

Well Known Congregational Pastor Succumbs to Illness
Luther R. Dyott, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational church at Portland for the past ten years, died Saturday following an illness of some weeks duration, involving a nervous breakdown. His death was somewhat unexpected, although he recently was granted a leave of absence by the church. A celebration in honor of the completion of ten years' service at the church by Dr. Dyott was held only a few weeks ago. He was 52 years of age.

EVEN THE LAW DOES VERY FUNNY THINGS

ARRESTED BOOTLEGGERS MAY BE AND MAY NOT BE BARBARICALLY CHARGE

Jack McIntyre got off a Southern Pacific train here on Monday night. The arm of the law marched quietly behind him.

McIntyre sought a lodging for the night. The arm of the law sought to learn what Jack had in two heavy suit cases and blocked his entrance to the hotel.

Jack submitted to a search very reluctantly, says the arm of the law, because—no doubt—the bags contained 30 quarts of whisky in bottles and demijohns.

Jack got mad when the arm of the law confiscated his booze, because it had cost him $300 to get it to Oregon from Nevada.

And Jack was taking his liquid wares to West Port, where he and other loggers were to have an up-roaring Christmas party.

Jack was released on bail until Friday, when, it is said, he will be arraigned for hearing.

"When will the complaint be filed against McIntyre as a bootlegger?" the arm of the law was asked on Wednesday.

"I do not know," says the arm of the law, right merrily.

Can you beat it?
All in one haul the arm of the law gets a wholesale bootlegger, releases him on bail and doesn't know when he will charge the "prisoner" with transporting intoxicants. Night officer Burke made the arrest and turned McIntyre over to the proper authorities.

CITIZENS WOULD SOLVE PUZZLES OF GLADSTONE

With Gladstone's city council in a deadlock and the progress of that community threatened with serious delays, 36 self-styled Live Wires, composed of the town's prominent citizens, met last Thursday night at Goodman's hall and held a rousing party for that purpose, and to meeting. The citizens have taken matters into their own hands with the idea of creating a more harmonious and effective co-operation in handling the city's affairs in general. Another meeting will be held this evening and a more definite business organization will result. Plans for handling Gladstone's financial puzzles will also be discussed.

Last Thursday two committees, whose work is much in demand, were appointed. The street committee comprises R. Freytag, T. J. B. Williams, W. W. Leet, Arthur Paddock, C. A. Frost and S. E. Lowe. A committee to handle the situation and the trouble brought about by flood waters includes E. D. Carter, Fred A. Miller, T. J. B. Williams, Arthur Paddock, Guy Dwigins, L. A. Read, Ed Harrington and J. A. Prater.

DIVORCE COURT PAUSES FOR CHRISTMAS RESPIRE

Casper J. H. Wilson charges Marie Holmes Wilson with extravagance and cruelty in a divorce complaint filed here last Thursday. The couple was married at Clatskanie, Or., on July 2, 1905.

Otto E. Gettis alleges cruelty and desertion in his complaint against Elizabeth Gettis, to whom he was married at Vancouver, Wash., on June 21, 1917. He claims he rented a farm in Clackamas county because he thought that would satisfy her. He found her at home intoxicated one evening, he charges.

Lucy J. Grabeel yesterday filed suit against F. W. Grabeel, to whom she was married at Broadhead, Ky., in December, 1883. She charges him with non-support and extreme cruelty, asks for title to property and custody of three minor children.

Winnie and Carl A. Johnson were given a decree of divorce last Thursday by Judge Campbell. Mrs. Johnson's former name, Winnie Beckman, was restored. Olein M. and Claire Ullshoeffter were divorced and the mother gets custody of three minor children.

Divorce decrees were signed on Monday by Judge Campbell separating Elsie G. and Harry R. Shadburn and Lelah G. and Leslie M. Baty. Mrs. Shadburn is permitted to resume her former name, Elsie Dailey, and Mrs. Baty gets custody of a son and $30 a month alimony.

Judge Campbell yesterday signed a decree separating Charles E. and Rosetta Rickabaugh. Some time ago Mr. Rickabaugh filed sensational charges against his wife. They lived at Willamette.

Sunday School Has Xmas
A great program for the entertainment of the children of the Methodist Episcopal church was rendered Monday evening. The big attraction was a Christmas tree. A feature of the program was a tableau "America," with a flag drill. Songs and exercises were offered by Sunday school children, and a tableau, "Rock of Ages," was an attraction.

CHRISTMAS JOYS ARE UNCONFINED

UNIFORMED SONS AND BROTHERS GET HOME FOR BIG HOLIDAY FEASTS

MILLS REMEMBER EMPLOYEES

Churches and Schools Celebrate and Khaki is Unusual Decorative Coloring

There was no harness on the Christmas spirit in Oregon City or Clackamas county this year. All energies cooperated to make the season one long to be remembered and the color tone lent by the boys in uniform who were permitted to come home for the day or for several days was an unusual feature. True, there were vacant chairs about the festive board in many homes, but the day was gladdened for even those deprived of the presence of all the family for the absent sons and brothers are doing a great and good work this holiday season and shall have earned, ere the next Christmas comes, an honor seat about hundreds of firesides in the county.

Churches, societies and schools throughout the county observed the season with appropriate exercises and has provided entertainment for hundreds of persons. Elaborate programs were characteristic of the exercises in Oregon City and several notable affairs have been reported from other sections of the county.

The force in the local postoffice worked night and day in handling an unprecedented deluge of holiday mail and did it so expeditiously that there was not a complaint about the distribution. The postoffice boys did much by their work to help make Christmas pleasant.

The unique feature of the holiday feast this year was the presence of uniformed young men from naval and army training stations. Many who had hoped to return home for the turkey feast were denied that pleasure by the stringency of military orders, but even to those in camp and cantonment the good cheer of the day was carried on wings of love. Hundreds of dollars worth of gifts, useful gifts for the boys on land and sea, were sent out of Oregon City in time to reach barracks rooms and even the trenches abroad, so that the thought of home and loved ones must have made Christmas delightful.

From Camp Lewis, American Lake, scores of young men returned home. Officers, of whose number this county has contributed heavily, joined with less fortunate but just as useful privates in making merry at home. In many cases the boys in khaki and in navy blue had only short furloughs, in some instances only long enough to permit them to gobble up the feast that was set for them and hurry back to the military or naval life.

All activity in Oregon City on Christmas day was centered about the Christmas feast, and scores of homes were scenes of family gatherings. Incoming and outgoing trains brought and carried away many people for the day. Services for the day were confined to the St. John's Roman Catholic and St. Paul's Episcopal churches, although all the other churches in the city had already had Christmas programs.

The three largest employers of labor in the city made the day an event for their workers in a practical way. The Oregon City Woolen mills paid each employee, and in the envelope was a membership to the Red Cross and a $1 thrift stamp. The profit-sharing plan adopted as a Christmas present a year ago was continued in force.

The Crown-Willamette mill presented each man with a check for one full day's wage and served a bountiful Christmas dinner to the 150 men who did not go home for the day. The usual Christmas menu was prepared, and for the occasion the dinner hour was made merry. Approximately 700 men profited from the plan of the company.

The Hawley Pulp & Paper company, which usually gives each man a turkey, this year included in each pay envelope a check for an additional day; which, on the average, figures considerably better than the value of a turkey.

COFFEY TRIAL DELAYED

Workman Charged with Assault to be Tried in Justice Court
The trial of Gilbert Coffey, charged by Deputy Sheriff Gus Schuebel, a Crown-Willamette mill watchman, with assault and battery, was postponed from Monday to Thursday by Justice of the Peace John N. Sievers, at the request of attorneys for Coffey. Coffey is charged with having engaged in a fistie encounter with a paper mill worker last Friday night. Schuebel took Coffey at that time to the labor temple, where his mates assured his appearance, if a warrant should be sworn out for him. The warrant was issued last Saturday.

MOLALLA RIVER TAKES TO A NEW COURSE

LEAVES WRIGHT'S BRIDGE AND SWEEPS HOME AWAY. ROAD EXPENSE HEAVY

The Molalla river has cut a new channel near Wright's bridge, between Mulino and Liberal, and has left its former course under that bridge with little more than a stagnant pool of water. The river broke through a natural opening that it has seemed to be seeking for years and on its wild way washed out and practically destroyed the beautiful summer bungalow on the Honeycomb ranch of Charles Honeyman of Portland. Wright's bridge is useless and damage amounting to hundreds of dollars has been done to the county road.

Judge Anderson and Roadmaster Roots visiting the scene last Thursday and announced that Wright's bridge is in such a damaged condition as a result of the unusual high water and the change in the channel, that it had to be closed to such foot traffic as would venture over it. The court faces the necessity of building a new structure over the new river channel and building a county road over part of the old river bed. The Molalla was a great river for several days and still is raging. The change in its channel is counted as one of the unique storm freaks.

On its new course the Molalla dashes along just below the lower approach of the well-known bridge and has flooded the lowlands over a great area. It is the opinion of the court that the course of the stream will never be changed back again at this point and that the rebuilding of the bridge will be necessary. The court estimates the loss of the Honeyman home as total.

CHRISTMAS WAS GAY FOR MAN WHOSE HOME BURNED

Fire which ousted him from his lonely dwelling in Portland, gave Judson Estes, a hermit, a merry Christmas. Instead of spending the day in cheerless solitude, Estes, who is 80 and cooks his own meals, was driven to the gay home of his son, W. E. Estes, Oregon City grocer, to revel in Christmas festivities.

And the fire did it. The fire started in the dry boards around the old smoke flue in Estes' house. Neighbors, in saving the home from destruction, tore the flue out, leaving the place cold and drafty.

Estes stuck it out, however, without fire in his stove until Christmas eve, when Mrs. C. F. Vaeth, a neighbor, called to see how the old hermit was faring. She found him lying on his bunk sick, hungry and cold. He told her he had been unable to cook on the old stove with the flue gone. Mrs. Vaeth moved him to her home and notified the police, who, in turn, notified the son at Oregon City.

PARKPLACE LADS PAROLED FOR PARENTAL GUIDANCE

Cecil Green, 12, and Lake Smith, 15, of Parkplace, were arraigned before County Judge H. S. Anderson, Monday, on a charge of assault with a deadly firearm, following the fatal shooting a week ago last Saturday of Leslie LaDoux, a 13-year-old boy, and uncle of the Green boy, during a duel between the three boys with 22-calibre rifles. Cecil Shaw, also of Parkplace, who was in the party, was not included in the charge.
For over half an hour Judge Anderson talked to the two boys, finally exacting a promise from them that they would neither possess nor use fire arms until they were 18 years of age, and upon promise of their being good boys in every particular, paroled them, the Green boy to his grandfather, Joseph LaDoux, father of the boy killed, and the Smith boy to his father, William Smith, a former deputy state game warden. The boys declared to the court that they did not know which one had fired the fatal shot.

MARRIAGE LICENSES

Only Few Take Advantage of Christmas for Conubial Events

A marriage license was issued in County Clerk Iva Harrington's office last Thursday to Myron Wishart, of Parkdale, and Jean Martin, of Willamette.

Marriage licenses for Christmas holiday ceremonies were issued on Monday to Harrison B. Reed and Ruth Revenue, Sandy; Edwin B. Mathews, Oregon City, and Inez G. Smith, Willamette; Leo Miller, Portland, and Marjorie Miller, Portland. The latter couple was married Monday afternoon at the Baptist parsonage by Dr. W. T. Milliken.

Married at Sunday Service
Immediately following the morning service on Sunday, the congregation at the Baptist church was asked to remain seated and Dr. Milliken married Virgil K. Purcell and Jennie C. Dillman, both popular young people. Mrs. Purcell is a niece of S. O. Dillman, of Oregon City.

YUKON DOGS ARE OF WOLFISH ILK

WONDERFUL BEASTS OF BURDEN WHO TAKE PLACES OF THE HORSES

OPEN TINS WITH TEETH

In a Fight Animals Use the Old Wolf Tactics. They Strike, Jump and Strike Again

(M. J. Brown)

Strip a man of all metallic substance, lock him in a bare room and leave him there with only tin cans of beef and he would doubtless starve.

Put a Labrador husky or an Indian malamute in the same position and it would grow fat, as long as the beef held out.

This is a rather surprising statement, but it is a positive and well known fact that Alaskan sled dogs will open any tin can with their teeth, when hungry enough, and on short ration mushing trips the driver has to be as careful with the canines as with the bacon.

I was much interested in the dogs of Alaska and I never missed an opportunity to observe them or talk with some old dog-beater who knew them.

And one day I saw a fight. I had often heard of the ferocity with which these beasts go to each other, but I had no idea I would witness a scrap, for it was summer time, and the beasts were on their long vacation.

In the summer the dogs are chained in groups or teams. Most of them are provided with kennels, where they can escape the pests and the rains, but in the day time they usually sit or lie on the top of their dog houses.

A dozen or more were in one family group just outside of town and I used to watch them at feeding time. One day as I was observing them a big shaggy husky came down the path. I don't know whether he had escaped or whether he was allowed to run loose.

As he passed the kennels every dog set up a howl, pulled at its chain and tried to get at the invader.

The free dog gave no attention to the din, he walked on as unconcerned as an Indian returning from a salmon eat. But when he had passed them, like a flash he turned and sprang at the nearest dog.

And I wondered if this particular dog taunted him with a nasty name as a last challenge, one of those taunts that no one in Alaska will stand for, but as I was not familiar with dog dialect, I could only surmise.

The Alaskan dogs don't get a hold and stay with it until death, as bulldogs do. They fight according to Marquis of Queensbury, no hitting in the clinches, no fouling.

The big husky rushed to his chained antagonist. For a second the two dogs eyed each other—then a strike and a get-away, quick as the wink of an eye. The most of the trail dogs are part wolf and they fight like their ancestors—strike like a steel trap and jump away. But once at it, they never quit. There is no mercy shown by beast or man in Alaskan fights.

I watched the contest for several minutes before the din of the chained dogs attracted attention and the owners came and stopped the combat. The free dog would rush in, snap his jaws and blood would spurt. Once to avoid a rush he jumped too far and came within reach of the chain of another dog. Snap, and his hip was laid open with an ugly wound, but the wounded dog never looked at his second antagonist. His mission was to kill the first dog, and they would have fought to the death if the men had not beaten them apart with clubs and stones.

Huskies are recognized as the best breed for sledding, but the Indians want the malamutes—half wolf. I had often heard it stated that the ancestry of a dog could be determined by the way in which he howled. Let a steamboat whistle and every dog will chorus in, according to the music he inherited. The "just dog" will bark, while the wild breed beasts will let out the long, lonesome howl of their forefathers.

The trail dogs of Alaska don't want any petting or familiarity. They are wonderful in their affection and fidelity, when they know who the boss is, but they won't make friends with strangers. They are supremely indifferent to any advances. They want you to leave them alone, and a wise tenderfoot will.

White men drive from seven to nine dogs on an outfit, depending on the load and the trail. They harness them fan-shape, spread out so they do not interfere with each other. The load is from 100 to 150 pounds to a dog.

Indians will drive a team of malamutes 70 miles a day. White men can't equal the Indians for speed or

STORM DOES DAMAGE BY RAISING RIVERS

MILLS AND CITY WATER SYSTEM PUT OUT OF COMMISSION BY RAINS

Aside from turning the meek and lowly Molalla into a wild torrent, the excessive rainfall of the past ten days added considerable to its damage since last week. The change of channel accomplished by the Molalla river in the vicinity of Wright's bridge between Liberal and Mulino was one of the most expensive freaks of the storm, inasmuch as it will be necessary to build a new bridge and to rebuild the roadway over the old river bed.

The mills were closed down for several days because of high water in the Willamette. The Crown-Willamette mill suffered less than the Hawley mill and the woolen mills, since only part of the plant was out of operation. The woolen mills closed down last Thursday and remained idle until the day after Christmas. The finishing room was operated for a time on Saturday because of the great rush of work that must be turned out. The grinder room of the Crown-Willamette mill was closed last Thursday when water entered and on that day, mill D, housing the larger paper machines, was the only one in operation. The Hawley mills were closed tight.

Repairs to the Oregon City-West Linn water system have been completed and the supply from the South Fork mains is rapidly filling the reservoirs. It is expected that the municipal elevator will resume operations after a rest of several days at any hour now.

The break in the pipe line was discovered near Clear creek, 12 miles from the city, after the intake screens on the south fork of the Clackamas had been cleared of the debris that collected during the recent storm. The supply in the reservoirs was diminished before a temporary pipe line could be installed around the break, and water was conserved in this city and West Linn by the simple expedient of shutting it off. With the temporary line working it was possible to repair the break in the mains, which extended under the bed of Clear creek.

M. D. Latourette, secretary of the water board, announced that the board would devise a system of signals for use in water shortage hereafter. The fire bell will probably ring a signal when water is to be shut off.

TIMBER GROVE'S SCHOOL CLERK WILL NOT RESIGN

Complications have entered into the affairs of the Timber Grove school district by the evident refusal of Rev. W. H. Wettlaufer, clerk of the school board, to resign, according to the agreement he is said to have made. As school clerk, Mr. Wettlaufer was recently a participant in a clash at a board meeting, in which he was roughly handled by B. Sullivan, a director.

Mr. Wettlaufer filed complaints of assault and battery against Mr. Sullivan and A. F. Buche. Mr. Sullivan was fined $5 and costs for his part in the affair and Mr. Buche was released. In the meantime the two directors had agreed to resign and Mr. Wettlaufer promised his resignation, it is said, if the directors would quit the board. The directors have presented their resignations, and Mr. Wettlaufer has written to County School Superintendent Calavan his refusal to take similar action. In his letter Mr. Wettlaufer intimates that his allegiance to the school and the nation require that he overlook his agreement and remain with the school board.

SPEAKERS FROM HERE

Mrs. Hughes and Mr. Spence Will Talk at Farmers' Meeting

Several prominent citizens of Clackamas county have been enlisted as speakers on the farmers' week program at the Oregon Agricultural college, which starts next Wednesday. Among these are Mrs. A. I. Hughes, secretary of the Guernsey Cattle club, of this county, which recently imported $11,000 worth of pure bred stock, and C. E. Spence, of Beaver Creek, master of the State Grange. Mrs. Hughes is to speak on "Guernsey Progress in Clackamas County," while Mr. Spence will discuss the state time business from the farmers' standpoint at the time conference which is to feature the farmers' week program.

FIND WINE IN BASKET

Night Officer Burke and Deputy Sheriff Henry Hughes Tuesday night scouted about the Southern Pacific depot for illicit liquor carriers. They found a woman with a suspicious looking suitcase and asked her to open it. The woman, who said she lived at West Linn, offered the officers a sample of the contents of two quart bottles of wine, but they could not open the bottles, and she was permitted to take her train to Salem with the liquor. The officers found nothing in several other suitcases that were searched.
