M., at the front door of the County Court House in the City of Oregon City in said County and State, sell at public auction, subject to redemption, to the highest bidder, for U. S. gold coin, cash in hand, all the right, title and interest which the within named defendants, or either of them, had on the date of said Judgment or since had in or to the above described real property or any part thereof, to satisfy said judgment order, decree, interest, costs and all accruing costs.

MALE OSTRICH BUILDS NEST

Sets on Eggs at Night During the Incubation Which Lasts Forty to Fifty Days.

After pairing, the ostrich begins to make his nest. It is the male alone that performs this duty. To do it, he squats upon the ground, and, balancing himself upon his breastbone, scratches up the earth with his legs and throws it behind him. When he has dug out enough on one side to suit him he turns round and begins to dig on another side, and continues this operation until he has made a hole large enough for him to sit in comfortably. A few days after the nest is finished the female begins to lay one egg every alternate day for eighteen or twenty days. She then rests for a while, which time varies from four to ten days, and then lays more. A pair of ostriches yield about forty eggs, though it is not unusual for a well-fed well-kept pair to yield fifty to sixty eggs. The eggs are placed so as to leave no space between them. The male and the female brood alternately. At night the male is always on the nest, as it possesses greater warmth than the female.

These birds perform their duties with the greatest skill, without any noise or breakage of the eggs. The incubation lasts forty-five days on an average, sometimes fifty days, but never continues beyond that. When the chicklings hatch out they can be heard trying to break the shell of the egg. Sometimes they succeed in doing so, but usually the father breaks the egg under the breast bone, tears the inside skin with his bill, and frees the chickling. Upon first reaching the air the chickling remains limp and weak. But the warmth of the parent soon revives it, and a few hours afterward it begins to run about, exercising its long legs, tottling over at each step, and recommencing again its stumbling journey. Four days after their hatching the chicklings begin to eat. They run after insects and swallow small pebbles. The father and mother do not help their little ones to find food.

Bluff of Foreman Failed.

Two of the nocturnal hooligans of the street cleaning department were engaged in wetting down the pavement near New York's busy corner at 45th street and 5th avenue. They were enjoying their work as usual, wetting no one and scaring everyone, when the foreman came strolling along and looked them over. A small group waiting for a bus hoped that the happy soakers were about to be scolded and the hope was gratified. "Well, well," called the foreman, testily, "you're guys ought to be up to 40th street. What about yet?" "Aw, we got to wet it down, ain't we?" called the younger of the hooligans. "We ain't lingering around for the love of it." The foreman walked over to the speaker as his companion turned off the water. "Don't get answering me back," said the foreman. "If you want to get anywhere in this department, just do what you're told to do and say nothing." "Aw, forget it," answered the young hooligan again. "I ain't trying to get nowhere in this department. I been drafted. By the time you get to be a superintendent I'll be a general in the army. Roll your hoop, boss, you're talking like a hero."

Orange Industry.

The interior of any one of the big orange packing houses in either Florida or California shows a wonderfully systematic arrangement for grading and sizing the fruit. There are a dozen different sizes of oranges and so automatic is the grading that every box of oranges comes out with every orange almost the exact size of its companion. The result is oranges which sell in the far Eastern markets as low as one cent apiece—from this to 50 or 60 cents a dozen. The only things which must be left to human judgment is the throwing out of culls—imperfect, too ripe or too green specimens.

Nowadays in both of the big orange growing states the orange business is divided into two distinct and separate industries—that of orange growing and that of orange packing and shipping. The latter is handled by co-operative associations and very few oranges are packed and shipped direct by the orange growers themselves.

The same conditions apply to lemons and grapefruit.

Air Warrior's Predicament.

An accident, without precedent in warfare, occurred to a French bombing plane, and death was averted by a feat of daring which will long be remembered. The airplane was about to descend after a raid, when the pilot discovered that two of his bombs had caught in the rigging below the car. It was impossible to land without exploding them and blowing the frail craft to fragments. The gasoline was already running low and some desperate expedient must be attempted within the next two seconds. While the pilot held his breath to an even keel the passenger crawled from his seat to the wing and thence to the rigging below. The bombs must be released with the greatest delicacy to prevent their exploding. Impossible as the feat seemed, it was at last accomplished and the passenger regained his seat in safety.

Psychological Effect.

"Why do you call your automobile a flivver?" "We don't always," replied Mrs. Chuggins. "When we speak of it in company we call it a motorcar. But when we take it to a repair shop we call it 'a flivver,' hoping it will influence the man to be easy with the bill."

JOURNAL GETS FUNNY

Comments with Silly Editorial on Late School District Trouble

The erudite Portland Journal editorializes upon Clackamas county affairs every day or so. Finds it helps the subscription business in this county. Here's one as an example of that bawling, bickering old rag passes out as clever. The Courier has taken the liberty to spell the names correctly, since the learned Journal does not frequently take that precaution:

"The tide of interest in the public school runs deep and warm in the Timber Grove district, a fortunate neighborhood which is not far from Oregon City, long the erudite seat of a Chautauqua. This no doubt accounts for the educational enthusiasm in Timber Grove.

"We shall expect to hear before a great while that educational zeal has come to boiling point, or the fighting point, in other Clackamas county districts, for they all enjoy the genial influences of the Chautauqua, but thus far Timber Grove carries off the pedagogic palm.

"At least we have not read of any other district where the directors are so intensely concerned about the welfare of the school that they fight over hiring the teacher. We know of directors who go to law over the teachers, but since the public pays the bills, we cannot say that it indicates genuine educational passion. But when the directors fight, as they did at Timber Grove, the penalties light on their own noses and nobody can question their scholastic ardor.

"The Timber Grove directors were divided two to one on the selection of the teacher, according to the report. On one side was the Rev. Mr. Wetlaufer, apparently a native of Ireland from his name. On the other side were Mr. Buche and Mr. Sullivan. We understand that Mr. Sullivan was born in Sweden.

"The Swedes and Irish never could agree upon the deeper problems of pedagogy. Hence it is no wonder that a difference of opinion arose among the Timber Grove directors about who should be their next teacher.

"The story that the Rev. Mr. Wetlaufer preferred Miss Bridget O'Flannigan, a young lady whom he used to know back on the Ould Sod, may not be accurate, but if it is true it is to his credit. If the Irish do not stand by one another who is to fight their battles for them?"
