

DIVORCE MILL GETS MUCH GRIST IN DAY

Oregon City's divorce mill received more new work than usual yesterday when four complaints were filed. Irena Brown, married to Nicholas Brown at Vancouver, Wash., on October 17, 1914, would divorce her husband on the strength of cruelty charges which she placed against him yesterday. She alleges that Brown knocked her down at a picnic dance at Milwaukie on August 12 when he struck her with his fist. She asks $15 a month alimony for the support of her son.

Harvey Burrow, married to Nanie Burrow at Shelbyville, Tenn., on August 25, 1889, alleges in his complaint that his wife deserted him on February 15, 1916, and makes that the basis of his complaint.

Andrew L. McCoy would divorce Florence McCoy, to whom he was married at Portland in May, 1904. He charges cruelty and wants her to have custody of their son, for whose rearing he is willing to contribute money.

The Boys' and Girls' Aid society has charge of two of the four children of Philip and Mary F. Baltimore because the mother is not at home enough to take proper care of them, according to allegations made by the former in his divorce complaint. They were married at Salem on October 2, 1894. The charge is cruelty.

HARDING HONORED

Masons Follow Business Meeting With Informal Banquet

Following a business meeting Monday night, Multnomah lodge A. F. & A. M., spread an informal banquet in honor of the 74th birthday anniversary of George A. Harding, one of the lodge's oldest members. Judge Grant B. Dimick was toastmaster and brief addresses were made by several members of the lodge. At the business session the master degree was conferred upon Fred M. Williams. George A. Harding and his three sons are members of Multnomah lodge No. 1, and his son, Lloyd B. Harding, a lieutenant in the officers' reserve corps, attended the meeting.

MISSIONARY COMES

Son of Former Pastor Relieves Rev. Mr. Stewart in County

The Rev. Herbert D. Rugg has taken charge of the county missionary work for the Baptist church and has relieved the Rev. W. B. Stewart and the Rev. A. J. Ware in this field. He was called to the charge from Chicago, where he was taking graduate work in theology. He is a graduate of the Colgate seminary in New York. The Rev. Mr. Rugg is a son of the Rev. H. L. Rugg, pastor of the Oregon City Baptist church in 1896. He will work with John W. Loder and D. C. Latourette, directors of the local missionary board.

SWAFFORD IN FRANCE

Oregon City Boys with Engineers Are Near Trenches

A cablegram, supposedly from France, was received yesterday from Harold Swafford by his bride of a few weeks, announcing his safe arrival in Europe with the 18th engineer regiment which left American Lake on August 1. Mrs. Swafford can make nothing more from the message than that her husband has arrived safely and there is no information of his location. Several other Oregon City young men are with Mr. Swafford in the same regiment. Swafford was formerly secretary of the Willamette Navigation Co.

FIRE THREATENS HOME

Tualatin Brush Blaze Comes Near Houses. Is Controlled.

Aid was called from Oregon City on Saturday to fight a brush and timber fire near Tualatin that threatened houses in that community, but when county officials and others arrived at the scene they found no damage had been done and that there was nothing serious about the fire that had been smoldering for several days. A large tract of second growth fir and brush was burned over and the fire went to the edge of a clearing about the home of A. Benson. It is well under control.

CHILD TAKEN ILL

Judge and Mrs. Sievers Return from Outing with Their Baby

Judge and Mrs. John N. Sievers returned on Monday from their eastern Oregon motor trip, which was centered upon Odell lake, where the party spent some time in camp. A hurried return was necessary due to the sudden illness of Mary Elizabeth, the little daughter. While at Odell lake the little lady suffered greatly and Mrs. Sievers came home with her on the train while the Judge piloted his car back over the mountains. The child is still ill and is under the constant attention of doctors.

SEA SLUG STORIES

after the enemy, took it up where he had left off. It is characteristic of the Sea Slugs that nothing was said of the danger two of the boats had run, and if anybody felt proud of what we had accomplished he made no mention of it.

"As I was saying," remarked the subaltern, "Max Horton's experience when he sank the Moltke was a good deal like that of a friend of mine who is in the service, and it goes to show the truth of the statement that it's mostly luck gets a submarine. This chap I speak of had been cruising around for months and had never seen a hostile periscope, much less a submarine. He hadn't even found one of those spots of dirty oil that are becoming classic around the British Isles.

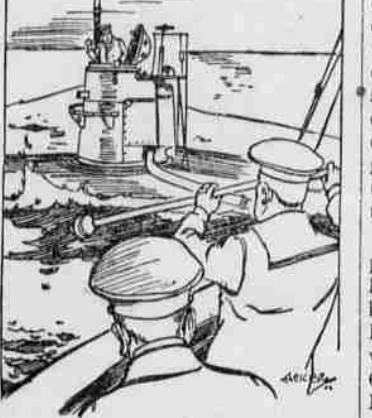

"Then one day, about noon, with the sun shining brightly, he was running along at top speed wondering whether there really was such a thing in the world as a German U boat, when suddenly, almost dead ahead, he saw something sort of wavering in the sea.

"The bow gun was loaded, and the gunner saluted and said, 'Submarine off the starboard bow, sir. Shall I fire?'

"No," ordered my friend. "It's probably one of our own. No such luck as for us to run into a German."

"With that the U boat sent a shell whistling past his ear, and he decided his luck was better than he had thought. His three inches began to spit, and the fire from the submarine stopped. A couple more shots from the chaser, and without any further sign of life on the U boat there suddenly was a big roar, a cloud of smoke, and she disappeared. They ran over to where she had been lying, but could not find a sign of her except for a few bubbles. These told of her fate. The last time I talked with that chap he hadn't seen a U boat since."

"Well, if our pal, D., had been as cautious as this fellow you told about," said another subaltern, "he would have saved himself a lot of trouble and a bawling out. You boys all know D. He's mighty keen after U boats. He was cruising round off Peterhead last autumn, when all of a sudden he sighted one, only a few yards ahead, just awash. She didn't seem to show any signs of life.

"D. is a nifty chap, and to save time he decided to run full speed ahead and ram her instead of waiting to fire his guns. He crowded on every ounce of power he could and crashed down into the hull of the submarine.

"The shock as he struck her just about the conning tower knocked every one of his men off their feet and dented his own bow badly. When they picked themselves up there was one wild scramble to get forward to the lance bombs."

The lance bombs, I might explain, are bombs fastened to instruments somewhat like harpoons which stick to the side of the submarine and explode. Their chief characteristic is their liability to go off before you can throw them and blow the blower up.

"Well," the subaltern continued, "D. himself had grabbed a bomb and was just about to hurl it when he turned sick and his knees gave way under him. A head had stuck out of the conning tower of the submarine, and an English voice yelled:

"What in h—s the matter with you? Are you trying to knock us loose from our steering post? Do you want a tow?"

"It was an E boat. Both the submarine and the chaser had to go in for a reef, and D. came uncomfortably near a court martial."

I have heard of many incidents like this, and it explains why the British submarine service hates the Sea Slugs. Every time any kind of a submarine shows itself above water somebody is likely to take a pot shot at it. San got us another raid.

The three remaining installments of this remarkable personal narrative will appear soon. They are as follows:

No. 2.—Life on the M. L.'s (Motor Launches). Cruising at night in dark blackness, liable to be shot to pieces by friendly batteries if late in getting into port. Mine sweeping at Gallipoli and fighting off Turkish aeroplanes by rifle fire. The song of the Sea Slugs.

No. 3.—A Motor Launch Raid on the Belgian Coast. In which the little submarine chasers crossed the mine fields by night, fired on the German gunboats and land batteries and escaped across the mine fields once more. How the British monitors, which are named after American generals, bombarded the German coast until the Germans devised a method of locating them.

No. 4.—Experiences at Dover. Aeroplanes bombard the barracks and town. German submarines laying mines in the harbor channel. What happened on a destroyer the day after I had dinner with her officers whom later I saw crushed and torn to death.

Opening Delayed

The school at Oak Grove, which was to have opened for the year on next Tuesday, will not open until September 10, according to the announcement this morning of G. W. Guthrie, principal. The delay is due to the failure of workmen to complete improvements upon the school building.

ADVOCATES FIGS FOR CLACKAMAS COUNTY

Believing that the Turkish fig will become a staple article in Oregon in the future, August Rakel, of Canemah, has placed samples on exhibition at the Huntley Drug store of this city, grown from a fig tree on his place at Canemah. The tree has brought forth its first crop and the second will come in about 30 days. The peculiarity of the fig tree is that it does not blossom, but puts forth a bud under each leaf. The fig samples are attracting considerable attention.

INTIMATE TALES FROM A ROMANTIC NORTHLAND

ficial" uprising, and who probably came from Philadelphia in 1907, points out the historic places of 20 years ago.

I started two days ahead of this prescription train and finished two days later, and I got a little of the old mad day spirit that is fast getting away from real history.

It's one hundred and ten miles over the pass to Lake Bennett, to the head waters of the Yukon, but 20 years ago, what a pass. In two miles of it men went up and over 2,500 feet of the worst path on earth—in the early spring. Over this one divide men paid one dollar per pound to have their outfit packed over, because they were exhausted to the point of where the weight of an ounce was a burden.

Today this famous trail is as defined as it was 20 years ago. It was literally black with gold-stamped men in that rush. Along the river it winds up and to the summit, when in the early spring the snow was waist high, and where the fiercest winds and snow storms of these mountain peaks cut down the men, who were tramped over by the survivors.

There's White Horse City, what is left of it—and that is only the absolutely deserted ruins. The skeletons of the log cabins have been heaved up and caved in—ruins that were once the liveliest town in America.

Along the trail are the deserted, demolished, log cabins of the Americans and Canadians, who, stranded in Skagway (or who had not sufficient capital to outfit over the pass), hacked out log cabin shacks and sold sandwiches to the "line," bread they baked themselves, and meat from the salmon and bear. These sold up to one dollar each to the mad horde over the pass, and as fast as the boys got sufficient coin for an outfit to let them by the Canadian officials, then they went back and "got in line."

The Dominion officials would not permit a man to go over the pass unless he had sufficient outfit to give him a chance to live down the river. It was sheer death to permit the men with slender provisions to tackle the 600 miles down the Yukon to the Klondike.

And up and down those mountain trails—today the road is as plain as it was when 30,000 people crowded each other from the path.

There are places where the horde had to stop and make a road ahead of them—where they had to cut poles and bridge the passes—oh, but it's a horrible old route in these days—when we can look up from the dim trails below and see cars of observation tourists looking down at the old, old trail.

And Dead Horse Pass—no doubt this story will be brought to the memory of the many who made this part of the scary trail—a bit of a foothold on the up-climb, just wide enough for a sober American citizen to wedge by, and over which horses were used to pack over, for those who could afford the traffic.

And they went over the gulch—how many is illustrated many years after, when a real wise Yankee went down below, picked up the hoofs with the shoes yet on, and sold them for souvenirs. And how the story goes that the game is yet being worked on the verdants at White Horse, where horse SHOES are nailed to any old dead hoof that can be procured and sold to the "mammas boys" and at good profit over the original investment.

Such is the game north of 53. The boys and girls expect it. At Ketchikan I went ashore for three hours as chaperon for a pair of old maids from Wisconsin. With them was a 16-year-old girl. I couldn't figure out the connection, and didn't try hard. At a curio store, I assumed the part of a dutiful nephew and protector and steered the old girls beyond the nature fakirs at the totem poles, past the one Ford stand, into a curio store.

In a display case at the entrance were Indian baskets. I called the attention of the older dame to these. She had told my fortune the night before, without charge, and in duty I was bound to break even.

"How much are those baskets?" I asked of the soda fountain clerk, pointing to one about a quart size in a glass case. The clerk sized me up (no doubt) as the dutiful dependent of the old line dames, and cracked back $135. "Give us about three and send them down to the boat," I answered, without batting an eye. The fountain youth was "hep" and he proceeded to make out the usual sales order, with a deposit—and from then on I was not troubled with old maids or school girls. The salesman gave me the wicked wink when I ordered them, and explained to me that while these baskets were supposed to have been under water, and all of that early-day stuff, when I came back he would let me in on the "Friday bargains," if I "got shut" of the "old maid" contingent.

This letter is but a glance at the gateway into Alaska—the gate swung on the hinges of 1897. From here on I will tell you a dozen and then some, little bits of human interest stories Frank Carpenter and his class fall over without ever noting.

MICKLE SOUNDS WARNING

Farmers Can Guard Against Shipping Meat at a Loss

Portland, Ore., Aug. 20, 1917.

To the Editor: Would you kindly give me space in your valuable columns to sound a word of caution and advice to farmers who are preparing dressed meats to be sold in Portland and other cities within the state.

A great amount of this meat is condemned and ordered destroyed because of reaching the market in such a condition that it is unfit for food. This is not only a direct loss to the farmer who ships it, but in such times when we are exercising every effort in the line of food conservation, it is a loss to the consuming public, and we feel a great deal of such loss could be avoided if farmers and butchers would properly prepare their meats, taking necessary precaution to see that it reaches the market in the best possible condition.

Dr. E. E. Chase, chief meat inspector of the City Health Department of Portland, informs me that during the last 16 months there has been condemned 18,426 lbs., of meat that was killed and dressed by farmers, and this condemnation has not been on account of a diseased condition of the meat but simply on account of what is termed "spoiled meat." We feel that if farmers and butchers will observe the following requirements, much of this loss can be eliminated:

1st.—The carcasses of veal and hogs must be entirely free from animal heat before being offered to the transportation company for shipment.

2nd.—All carcasses of veal should have two sticks, one in the thoracic cavity, the other in the abdominal cavity, so as to spread the carcass and hold it apart. In hogs weighing over 200 pounds it would be well to have them split through the hips and shoulders, as hogs sour very quickly during hot weather. Thoroughly wash the inside of the clean cloth until all slime and dampness is thoroughly removed; the sprinkling of cayenne pepper on the inside of the carcass tends to prevent the work of flies.

All carcasses, except veal, must be wrapped in a clean cloth before being offered for shipment.

J. D. MICKLE, Dairy and Food Commissioner.

KELLAND FIRE OUT

Timber Owned by Hackett Goes in Blaze Near Twilight

A timber fire on the Thomas Kelland tract near Twilight, thought to have been started by careless campers, has been extinguished. The blaze burned over many acres of second growth fir owned by E. A. Hackett, of Oregon City. Friday the men fighting the fire stopped its progress by trenching around it, and there is no further danger from flames in that section.

Howard Wants Divorce

Married at Corvallis on October 22, 1914, Howard Rose Friday brought suit for divorce from Elsie Rose, mother of their 1-year-old child. ## THREE VOLUNTEERS TO GO AMONG FIRST LOT

Clackamas county's five per cent of the first draft quota to be sent to American Lake has been selected by the board from among the volunteers who asked to be sent with the first group. The first man to ask that he be sent at once was Philip Hammond, popular young attorney. Hammond passed all requirements and was certified some time ago. He was an applicant for admission to the first training camp of the officers' reserve corps. The second volunteer is Charles Moulton, another prominent young lawyer. Mr. Moulton is associated with W. M. Stone here and he and Hammond are close friends. The third man to make up the five per cent is William Foster, an electrician living at Oswego. The second group to be sent to American Lake from this county will comprise 21 men, who will go forward on the 19th. Sheriff Wilson is personally charged with seeing that the men board the train here at the proper time and says he will be on duty September 5 as much to do his duty as to act as a committee on farewells when the first three leave.

Rev. Griffin Comes

WHY THEY FAILED.

Both Were Caretakers, and One Should Have Been a Promoter.

In the American Magazine is an article entitled "Are You a Caretaker or a Promoter?" In which a writer describes how he and a friend went into partnership and failed miserably.

"As I look back on that day," he says, "I wonder that we did not see the end of our enterprise from the day of its beginning, for there could be only one possible end. To be sure, Calkins and I worked for the Universal company for years. We knew all its methods, all its trade secrets, all the possible pitfalls in the road of such an enterprise. We had kindred tastes and abilities; we were hard workers and simple livers; we were both ambitious and both singularly agreed in matters of business policy.

"We saw all these factors and counted them as great strength. The amazing thing is that we failed to see in them at the very outset a fatal weakness, for Calkins and I were too much agreed. Our tastes and abilities were altogether too similar. What Calkins could do well I could do equally well. The things he was afraid of I was afraid of too.

"At watching expenses and arranging for prompt deliveries we were both efficient beyond complaint. But neither of us had any taste or ability for jumping out into the field and dragging business in by the hair. I had never completely recovered from the setback to my confidence which my youthful breakup had administered. And, as for Calkins, he was completely lost the minute he got ten feet away from his own desk."

Infinitesimal Webs.

Mexico, the land of Montezuma, prickly pears, sand, volcanoes, earthquakes, wars, revolutions, intrigues, etc., has many subterranean wonders both in vegetable and animal life. Among these latter is a species of spider so minute that its legs cannot be seen without a glass. This little arachnid weaves a web so wonderfully minute that it takes 40 of them to equal a common hair in magnitude.

Near to Treason.

Misprision of treason is an expression rarely heard in this country, but it has a very definite meaning in the laws of the United States. It consists in concealing the treasonable acts of others and is classed as a crime not much less than treason itself. It may be committed by citizens of the country or aliens who enjoy the protection of American law.

The Best Way.

TAKE CARE WITH FIRE

Adjutant General's Office Warns All Who Go Into Woods

All persons entering the forests must be extremely careful at this time about lighting fires. This is not the Fire Marshal warning of the usual type. There is a very urgent reason for this warning. The woods just now are filled with military patrols with rigid instructions to shoot public enemies caught setting fire to the forests.

Therefore, it is doubly necessary to be careful as military patrols, while instructed to exercise every precaution, might possibly make a mistake.

These military patrols are operating in every part of Oregon where forests are to be found. Their location is not revealed for obvious reasons. They move from place to place and keep to cover as much as possible. Their task is that of hunting down public enemies who have been firing the Oregon forests, and they are under orders from the western department of the army to deal instantly and vigorously with such public enemies.

So if necessary for you to go into the woods, be careful about lighting fires. No doubt it would be better to keep out of the woods unless you have urgent business therein.

Home-Made Drier

Government officials and others who have been studying the country's food situation are firmly convinced that if the present season's big surplus in vegetables is to be saved, quantities of these products must be dried. In accord with the government's desire that means be provided for saving as much food as possible, a concern which makes a specialty of food-drying machinery has planned a drier suitable for large-scale community effort or for private industry, which can be built in part by those operating it and in part purchased from this firm. This vegetable drier measures about 25 feet long and contains six compartments, 3½ feet square. The latter can be built by any carpenter with the aid of blueprints furnished by the company. Each chamber contains a number of trays, with galvanized-steel bottoms. The equipment for heating and circulating the air is situated at one end. A fan forces air heated by steam radiators among and through the trays, which can be removed as their contents are dried. The machine is described and illustrated in the September Popular Mechanics magazine.

Has Recovered Her Health

So many women are suffering from similar afflictions that this testimonial letter from Mrs. Laura Beall, Plattaburg, Miss., will be read with interest: "I got in bad health. My left side hurt all the time. I took doctor's medicine, but it did me no good. I took two bottles of Foley Kidney Pills and I feel all right now." Backache, rheumatic twinges, pains in side, swollen and sore muscles and kindred symptoms are quickly relieved by Foley Kidney Pills.—Jones Drug Co.

BIG SALE ATTRACTS

Thousands Enter Doors of Store Each Day Sale Continues

Mob psychology was demonstrated to hundreds in Oregon City during the early days of this week while the closing out sale at the L. Adams' department store was in progress. The sale continues to attract great crowds of buyers and it is evident that they come from every corner of the county, to realize upon the bargains that they find.

Mr. Adams has been forced to add to his sales force every experienced clerk he could find and still there are not too many to care for the shoppers. Wares are displayed and sorted so that they can be sold and delivered to buyers with the least possible effort and delay and although it is known that thousands enter the store and buy at the sale each day it is difficult to note where the holes are being made in the big stock.

Mr. Adams said yesterday that he would continue the sale until his stock was exhausted.

A Dollar a Head

Oregon's 1917 contribution to the income tax is practically a dollar per capita. Washington's is over $1.50 per person; California's over $4.00. For the United States, the average is $3.50 per capita. Except the Southern states, Oregon has the smallest incomes of any in the union. The figures for the three Pacific states are as follows:

|             |                 |
|-------------|-----------------|
| Oregon      | $80,615.94     |
| Washington  | 2,079,637.10    |
| California  | 10,108,451.97   |
| U. S. total | $60,006,141.70 |
