INTEREST GROWS IN BOND PLAN FOR ROADWAY

Forty-three good roads meetings were scheduled Monday night at a meeting of the road bond campaign committee in the parlors of the Commercial club. From two to five meetings will be held in the 11 road districts of the county for the conduct of a campaign of education on the issue of authorizing $1,700,000 road bonds at a special election November 24. These 43 meetings are designated as principal meetings, being held at central places throughout the county, but other gatherings will be held in many school houses in every section.

In reply to criticism directed at the asphaltic concrete pavement that has been laid by the county paving plant, a resolution was adopted recommending to the county court that concrete pavement be considered a standard pavement, and that it be laid in such districts as may request. Some opposition has developed to voting road bonds, on the ground that the asphaltic-concrete type is too smooth for horses on stiff grades.

The campaign committee also recommended to the county court that no bonds be sold, until the several districts have prepared the roads for hard surfacing, and then only in such amounts as may be necessary to complete any section of paving.

With 43 road meetings arranged, and others in prospect, and with only three weeks remaining until the election, Clackamas is likely to have a whirlwind campaign. As yet no organized opposition to the bonding plan has developed.

TREATY CONTEST NOW ARRIVES AT CRITICAL STAGE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—A final vote this week on ratification of the peace treaty is proposed in an unanimous consent agreement drawn up for presentation today by the administration leaders.

Apparently contemplating the possibility of deadlock over reservations, the agreement provides that after this week, the treaty, if not ratified, can be laid aside.

With the administration forces in the senate fight on the ratification of the Versailles treaty ready to combat the proposal of Senator Lodge, the majority leader, to fix November 12 as the time to vote on the ratifying resolution, the treaty battle this week is expected to run into its last phase, with assured prospects of a bitter struggle before the week is over.

Senator Hitchcock, the minority leader, says that he would not be surprised to find the situation advanced before the end of the week so that final vote on the resolution of ratification would be had around the time suggested by Mr. Lodge. But the administration forces, he says, were not going to be hurried or, as he puts it, "trapped" into any move that would deliberately play into the hands of the majority.

TELEPHONE GIRL HEADS LIST IN MARRIAGE MART

Is the percentage greater among telephone girls who marry than other classes of girls?

Often a person goes to the telephone, tired and mad with everybody, ready to turn things topsy turvy to give vent to his anger—when the unexpected thing happens.

"What number did you say you wanted? Thank you. Just a minute, please. There's your party."

The voice is so sweet and so consoling that he forgets all about himself. After hanging up the receiver, he suddenly catches himself thinking about that voice.

Yes, he will have to call up somebody else just to hear it again. And this time the voice at the other end of the wire, when he asked for the number, seemed just a little sweeter to his ear.

And then one day he picked up courage enough to ask her if she would consider it bold for him to invite her to a movie when she was off duty. "Who are you, sir?" was the question asked.

And then he picked up courage enough to ask her if she would consider it bold for him to invite her to a movie when she was off duty.

Of course it was a little bold, but she would go anyway.

And naturally there followed more trips to the movies—until a very happy marriage culminated.

All of which leads up to the question again, is the percentage greater among telephone girls who marry than among other classes of girls.

It is. Expert statisticians have not investigated the question, nor have they published reports with comparative figures. Not that at all.

But in a number of cities it seems that the local telephone companies are crippled for help by reason of the girls resigning for matrimonial reasons. At least, the girls give that as their excuse for leaving.

One of the high officials of the Pacific Telephone company, when asked if he had ever made any investigations along the lines in question, quite naturally replied that he had never had the matter under serious consideration. But he did admit that frequently the employees of the company resign to get married.

"Now, don't mistake me," he said, "when I say frequently—that all do. But I suppose the same conditions prevail here in the matrimonial proposition as in other companies."

"Do you believe that the operators become acquainted with the opposite sex by reason of their position—that is, the hello girls?"

"Well, I don't know. Sometimes they may. I never knew of a business man who fell in love with a voice. Yes, I'll take that back. I do remember two instances. In one case the girl married a man worth a million all because she happened to have what one would call a sweet voice. He asked the girl if she wouldn't meet him, and when she refused to do this until properly introduced, the millionaire promptly arranged for the introduction."

Said an operator of the local telephone company:

"I enjoy my work—well you see—my work is appreciated more than other kinds of employment. When I get a number for a party, it certainly helps to pay one for her trouble to be thanked for it so nicely by folks."

"One man was so nice to me that my curiosity got the better of me to find out who he was. And I did. He comes to see me now. But please don't tell him how anxious I was to know him. I really met him at a party, but I knew all about that before hand."

FARMERETTES IN THE HOLY LAND

American Corn at Bethlehem

Jewish Farmerettes

Underwood Palestine's Ancient Cedars

The farmerette idea has invaded even the Holy Land, according to the latest reports received in New York from Jerusalem by the American Jewish Relief Committee.

American farmerettes helped win the war, and then many of them folded up their overalls. These Judea farmerettes, on the contrary, are going in for the tremendously harder task of reconstruction farming. Their job is to transform the Holy City into a garden spot from the place of desolating poverty that war has left it and to help provide additional food supplies for the starving Jewish women and children in the Holy Land.

Sixty Jewish girls from fourteen to twenty years old, almost all of them orphaned, many of them victims of the Turkish invasion, are engaged in this work at present, and their number is increasing every day. Their wages are paid by the Joint Distribution Committee of American Funds for Jewish War Sufferers, which is fostering the farming plan, and one of whose constituent bodies, the American Jewish Relief Committee, is now engaged in a series of state campaigns in this country to raise its coming year's relief fund of $25,000,000. Tools are loaned by the American Red Cross, and seeds are given by the same organization, or sent from England, or purchased locally by American Jewish Relief agents.

Four stony, uncultivated wastes have already been turned into flourishing market-gardens, by the Judea farmerettes, known locally as the Jerusalem Land Girls, whose occupation is all the style in the Holy City. Girls who turn up their noses at the idea of being domestic, work around the gardens, digging

VISIT FRIENDS IN OLD HOME TOWN

Dr. and Mrs. Stuart Return After Trip to Utah and Iowa

Dr. and Mrs. G. E. Stuart, who left Oregon City September 8 for a visit to the old home of Dr. Stuart in Iowa, have returned to Oregon City.

After leaving Oregon City Dr. and Mrs. Stuart first visited Ogden, Utah, where they were guests of J. H. Bower, brother of Mrs. Stuart, and after remaining in that city for about a week they visited Webster City, where they were guests of Dr. Stuart's brother, L. E. Stuart. From there they went to Waterloo, Iowa, where relatives were visited. They also visited relatives at Shellrock and Janesville. The latter place is the former home of Dr. Stuart.

A party of friends planned a trip to where the old home of the Stuart family resided, and close by was the old stone school house, where Dr. Stuart attended more than 50 years ago. The building is still in use, and as the little party of old time friends gathered for a basket luncheon, it was proposed by one of the members of the party that all join in singing one of the old time songs sung while attending the school 60 years ago. So "School Days" was the selection rendered. The old home place was also visited there, and the only portion remaining was the old cellar, where Dr. Stuart says he enjoyed many a sip of cream from the big pans of milk. It was on one of these occasions, he especially remembered, when he stole away from the table and creeping down into the cellar had just buried his face in one of the big pans, when his mother caught him in the act. She was horrified, says the doctor, when she found him partaking of the cream. He says he will never forget the expression on his mother's face. The boy ran with the cream streaming down his face, when one of the neighbors inquired as to the trouble. He was told the boy was stealing the cream from the pan, but George always bore a good reputation and was considered a truthful lad until this occasion, when he told his mother he had not drunk the cream. As George's second name had always been undecided, she exclaimed, "Now you will never be named George Washington, as I had intended naming you that, but instead I shall call you Edward." Dr. Stuart says he believed he was named for Prince Edward, and he has been truthful ever since.

Another historic place visited was the old Indian burying ground, where beads and other relics of the early days are buried. A number of these relics were found.

Before starting for their home in the west Dr. and Mrs. Stuart visited Butler Center, Richmond and Parkersburg, and while en route home stopped at Boulder Rock, Colorado, where a family reunion was held.

OREGON IS WINNER OVER WASHINGTON WITH SCORE OF 24-13

SEATTLE, Nov. 1.—In one of the most grueling football games ever staged in the northwest the University of Oregon eliminated the University of Washington as a contender for the championship of the Pacific coast this afternoon. Final score: Oregon, 24; Washington, 13.

Today's battle was strictly one between backfield men. Neither line seemed able to hold the enemy. As was conceded before the engagement Oregon has the best set of backs and that is why Oregon triumphed.

The game was over at 4:45 p. m., being wound up in the twilight. The long length of time is accounted for by the great many "times out" taken by Oregon. The Eugene backfield held consultation after consultation all throughout the scrap.

French Aviator Who Has Started to Fly Around the World

Flying across the Atlantic and the American continent are praiseworthy feats says the French aviator Poulet. But he has greater ambitions. He has started out to fly around the world. He is seen here, at left, with Benoit, his mechanic, just before they left France. Bad weather forced Poulet down after his first start, but he is making bets with himself and his acquaintance, that he will fly around the globe. Melbourne, Australia, was his first objective.

BOND ISSUE FOR ROADS INDORSED BY GRANGE AT SPECIAL MEETING

MOLALA, Nov. 2.—The grange in session last Saturday adopted a resolution indorsing the proposed bond issue of $1,700,000 for permanent improvements to Clackamas county roads. The resolution also condemned C. E. Spence, state master of the grange for his opposition to the bond issue and his attempt to use his official position to boost his individual fight against the bonds.

The members wanted it definitely understood that Mr. Spence does not represent the grangers of Clackamas county when he is opposing the good roads movement. At one time Mr. Spence had a very strong personal following in the Molalla valley country.

NEW JAIL IS URGED IN REPORT OF JURY; OLD QUARTERS UNSAFE

Declaring that the county jail is unsafe and unsanitary, the grand jury in its report filed Friday, recommended the erection of a new jail separate from the courthouse. Under the present arrangement, the report says, young offenders are brought into contact with professional criminals.

The report also recommends that the windows on the west side of the record vault be protected by iron bars or shutters. The sheriff's office was found to have insufficient vault room for records. It was suggested that a system of duplicate tax bills be devised, so that one set can be stored in a safe place outside of the county treasurer's office.

Where the Legion Stands

The American Legion is standing on safe ground in its position to refrain from taking sides in a class controversy. The Legion was not organized for that purpose, and its function is not to act as an antidote to settle either pending or actual difficulties between capital and labor, nor to act as a policeman in the event of industrial trouble.

If the principles of the Legion are attacked, then the organization will defend itself as it defended in the recent world war the principles for which this country stands. If the United States government is attacked, then the Legion will don its fighting clothes aggressively.

We do not understand it was the purpose of the Live Wires to pass the buck to the Legion over the possibility, remote we hope, of local troubles in labor circles. In centers where hundreds of men are employed there will always be rumors of strikes, however idle. We have seen, very recently, in this country, that strikes were fomented and encouraged by alien enemies of this government, and every member of the American Legion is, we opine, interested in the actions of those men who have come to our country as a harbor of refuge and abuse its hospitality by inciting its citizens to unlawful acts, and to array class against class. Under such immigration laws as this country has established, such things will be done, but no workman should feel that the American Legion is a tool for any class. Its affairs are in safe hands, and it will not be used to pull the chestnuts of either labor or capital from the fire.
