OREGON HAS THE HIGHEST per capita expenditure for roads of any state in the union. Counties of Oregon expended at least $5,961,305.68 on county and district roads and bridges during 1915, according to figures prepared by the Oregon Voter from county records. Adding to this sum the $230,000 expended by the state from the one-fourth mill highway tax, it is certain that Oregon actually expended $6,200,000 for road and bridge improvements during the year.

Now Oregon takes the lead in the per capita road costs, and Clackamas county leads in the amount spent during 1915, excluding only three counties which spent money derived from the sale of road bonds during the year. Multnomah county leads the list of Oregon counties by spending $2,467,124.34. Then comes Clatsop, then Columbia and fourth, Clackamas with $283,699.19. Marion county follows Clackamas county, although Marion has a far greater assessed valuation than Clackamas.

In discussing these figures, the Oregon Voter says: "About $2,400,000, more than one-third, was expended for what might be classed as permanent improvements—good bridges, grades built on good lines, and hard-surface pavements.

"Nearly $4,000,000 was expended in maintenance of old macadam and dirt roads, and for some new macadam and dirt roads. This class of roads includes nearly all the road mileage of Oregon, connecting the cities, traversing the rural regions, and reaching into remote and sparsely-settled farming districts. While there is much waste in building these roads, they are the great economic necessity, and are of far more benefit to the agricultural population than the main highways that are permanently improved.

"It is obvious that the main problem for Oregon in road building is not that of hard-surface trunk highways, important and desirable as that is, but the roads that enable the farmers to market their crops and permit social intercourse in farming regions. In the main, the county courts and road supervisors are striving for better and more economical methods, and their efforts were reflected last year in that more results per dollar expended were obtained in the counties of Oregon than in any year preceding. To the county commissioners and county taxpayers the credit is due, although the influence of the reorganized state highway department has made itself felt helpfully in all counties where the commission availed themselves of it.

"Yet it is essential that more progress be made—not that more money be expended, but that far better methods be followed. The county commissioners meet in their state convention once a year, and learn from each other and from experts; in some counties they are county conventions of supervisors; and road engineers are taken into different counties to criticize local methods. This is working in the right direction, but there should be more of it.

"Also, Oregon's road laws are burdensome and confusing, creating unnecessary expense. The next legislature should straighten out the tangle, and substitute a simple, workable road code for the clumsy aggregation of statutes now encumbering the lawbooks.

"We of Oregon are expending enough money on roads now—far too much, in the opinion of most taxpayers. A big state bond issue for the construction of trunk highways paralleling railroads and rivers would yield millions more, but is not the main problem to concentrate on getting better results for the many millions we now expend, rather than burden the taxpayers still more for ambitious improvements which are not a pressing economic necessity as are the roads into the farming districts?"

TRUTH AND DECENCY ARE STRANGERS to the Oregon City Courier. Misrepresentation, exaggeration and pure fiction play a most important part in every story and editorial. The Courier is willing to go to any end to "get" a person it does not like, is always ready to manufacture news or stretch facts out of all proportions in an attempt to injure the reputation of an enemy, political or personal.

The Courier in its frantic efforts to discredit Sheriff Wilson has executed antics so peculiar and printed stories so wild that they do not need to be recognized by the sheriff's friends.

Take for instance this editorial remark in the last issue of that paper: "The capitalistic Enterprise remarks that Oregon City's loss from the recent high water in the river was 'trifling.' How about the workers in the mills who lost their wages those days that the mills stood idle? Likely that didn't occur to the silk stocking Enterprise."

The workers in the mills did not lose one day's time because of the high water, because those mills are running on Sundays to make up for lost time. The Courier barked at the moon again. It yelped in its usual manner without investigation before it yelped. But what else is to be expected from the Courier?

That worthy rag probably is the only pronounced exponent of indecent moving picture shows among all the newspapers of the state. Many newspapers are not willing to take a definite editorial stand because they fear they may lose advertising, but the Courier steps forward and criticizes The Enterprise because this paper dares express its views in the matter. The Enterprise not only believes that indecent moving picture films should be kept from the theatres, but that indecent advertising should be kept from the newspapers. Moreover, The Enterprise has kept its columns free from questionable pictures and advertising.

CLACKAMAS COUNTY COMMUNITIES will watch with interest the outcome of an experiment at Scio, where the various denominations have combined in one church and under one pastor. A Presbyterian, Christian, Methodist and Baptist congregations, either having a resident pastor under the old arrangement, were brought together in a "Federal church" with a confession of faith that all could endorse. An Oklahoma minister, who had had experience in conducting such a congregation, was called to take charge of the new church. There were 5 Methodists, 11 Presbyterians, 18 Christians and 21 Baptists in the town, totaling 55 members. The Woodburn Independent in discussing this new church predicts that within a year the membership will be doubled.

Estacada has under consideration a plan of consolidating the protestant churches of that town, and the plan could be tried out, probably with high success, in a number of other communities.

One strong church with a well paid pastor is much better than a half dozen of weak, struggling churches. The American public in general is beginning to feel that the matter of denominations is secondary in religion, and that if much of the energy now spent in an inter-denominational struggle was devoted to the general advancement of mankind much greater good would be done. The Laymen's Missionary conference, recently held in Portland, the success of which cannot be questioned, shows the success possible in religious work carried along broader lines than the boundaries of certain denominations.

REGISTRATION THROUGHTOUT OREGON IS SLOW. Only a fraction of the voters have done their duty, yet the registration books soon will close and the primaries are only three months away. A last-day rush which will completely swamp the county clerks of the state is feared as a result of the apathy on the part of the voters which now is so apparent.

Clackamas county is no exception to the rule. Two thousand voters have not yet appeared, according to Clerk Harrington, yet the number qualified to vote in Clackamas county is estimated at 14,000.

These last-day rushes for registration are hard both on the county officials and on the voters themselves. It means much delay for those desiring to register, and much extra hurry and work for the clerk. Under the present statute, all voters who register now will not be compelled to register again as long as they do not change their address and vote at least once every two years.

In this county, Clerk Harrington has done everything possible to make registration easy. Registrars throughout the county have been named and a special deputy whose sole duty it is to keep the registration records is stationed in her office in the courthouse. To the voter who registers now there will be no delay, he will avoid the last minute rush.

Good citizenship is more than mere obedience of the laws of the city, state and nation. Registering early is just as much an act of good citizenship as respecting a statute provision.

"OUR PLATFORM IS NOT MOLASSES to catch flies. It means business. It is the utterance of earnest and honest men who intend to do business along those lines, and who are not waiting to see whether they can catch votes with those promises before they determine whether they are going to act on them or not." So spoke Woodrow Wilson, addressing a political meeting on August 15, 1912, just one month after his nomination for president.

"Our platform is one of principles which we believe to be essential to our national welfare. Our pledges are made to be kept when in office, as well as relied on during the campaign." So read the Democratic national platform on which Mr. Wilson had been nominated. And that platform contained this pledge: "We favor a single presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the constitution making the president of the United States ineligible for re-election, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle."

"In order, therefore, to satisfy the technical requirements of the statutes of the state of Ohio, I hereby consent to the use of my name as a candidate for the presidency by any candidate who seeks to be elected a delegate to the Democratic national convention which is to assemble in June." So wrote Woodrow Wilson on January 14, 1916, to Charles Q. Hildebrandt, secretary of state for Ohio. So clearly is Mr. Wilson convicted by his own words that no comment is necessary.

When Woodrow Wilson read the one term plank in the Democratic platform, which had just been adopted at Baltimore, he got into communication with his representative, at Baltimore, Wm. F. McCombs, and through McCombs made a desperate effort to have the plank stricken out because—he fully realized that the plank would pledge him, if he accepted the nomination, to refrain from running for a second term. Mr. McCombs did his best and then phoned Mr. Wilson that it was impossible to have the plank stricken out and that an open attempt to do so unquestionably would jeopardize his (Wilson's) nomination. When Representative Clayton was seeking to put through the house the constitutional amendment providing for a single presidential term, President Wilson sent for him and they had a long conference. Judge Clayton immediately lost interest in the constitutional amendment. At the expiration of his term in the house, Mr. Wilson appointed Mr. Clayton a judge on the federal bench. Thus Mr. Wilson has observed the principle and kept the pledge which he and the Democratic national convention "made to be kept."

EX-SENATOR ROOT'S SPEECH before the New York Republican convention has so clearly defined the issues of the presidential campaign that he who runs may read. These are Democratic tariff legislation and a hostility to business prosperity which produced seriously hard times that were only temporarily abated by the outbreak of the European war; a Mexican policy actuated by hatred of President Huerta, of Mexico, which led President Wilson to "butt in" in the Mexican situation to the extent of invading Vera Cruz and sacrificing eleven American and 300 Mexican lives; to align this government with the bandits who were almost daily murdering American men, outraging American women and destroying untold millions of American property; to adopt a parasitism in Mexican affairs which induced Mr. Wilson to refrain from anything but hollow protests against the outrages perpetrated on Americans; a foreign policy characterized by first shaking the fist at foreign nations violating American rights, and later shaking the finger at them, a policy which has resulted in no flag being so dishonored and no citizenship as little worth claiming as ours.

As Mr. Root pointed out, within four days after the sinking of the Lusitania, and while American citizens were still mourning for the relatives and friends who had gone down in her, President Wilson in a public speech proclaimed to the world that "a man may be too proud to fight," and whatever he may now say he meant by it, "the phase has become a byword of derision for the government of United States." During the early days of the war, when little Switzerland and neutral little Holland were mobilizing their military forces as a warning that their neutrality must not be violated, Mr. Wilson was exerting his power as president to forestall and prevent military preparedness and sneering at those who urged that at least this country make a careful survey of its military resources; and only now, when the opinion that we should no longer remain defenseless has become public opinion and insistent and even peremptory has President Wilson—not leading but following—shifted his ground and asked congress to make some adequate preparation for national defense.

And even now, Mr. Wilson's Democratic colleagues, perplexed by his change of attitude, are unwilling to adopt his newly-adapted ideas. The assembling of a cabinet of small men, chosen not for their ability to serve the nation but for their usefulness in promoting the political ambition of the newly-elected president to harmonize the factions in his party and insure for himself a second term, will constitute one of the important issues, and it will be pointed out that, with only two strong men in the entire cabinet, Garrison and Lane, the first was compelled to resign and the second has been placed in a position where his strength must prove of least avail to the nation as a whole.

Senator Root's speech was a true keynote of the campaign, and while it was singularly free from personalities, it effectively portrayed Woodrow Wilson as a man of infinite smallness who, in the confidence of his overbearing conceit has surrounded himself with a cabinet composed of men as inefficient as they are narrow.

WILLAMETTE VALLEY FARMS AND RANCHES can be made to produce far more than they are now producing, and the prosperity of western Oregon can be correspondingly increased if more progressive methods were used by the tillers of the soil. The farmer is a thifty individual along some lines, but when it comes down to saving the fertility of his soil he is found lacking.

Many Clackamas county farmers rob their soil of its fertility. They never think of replacing the strength taken by crops harvested year by year. When crops grow less, and their income is correspondingly decreased, they blame everything but themselves.

A man named Wilson bought a run-down farm near Eugene 12 years ago. His neighbors predicted early defeat, for Wilson was "broke," and the land was declared to have been used until it was of no value. Mr. Wilson made a trade the other day, and incidentally estimated its profits on that farm at $50,000.

The experience of Wilson, while it may seem impossible to some, is verified by some of Eugene's most prominent business men. His success is a testimonial to the worth of Willamette valley farm lands, and a severe criticism of many farmers who now complain they can make nothing but their living.

FORUM OF THE PEOPLE

Bridge Improvement Urged.

OREGON CITY, Feb. 22.—(Editor of the Enterprise)—Our city, which is not equaled by any in the state, has manufacturing establishments, scenery and water which many towns would be willing to pay a good price for. But every day something confronts us which deserves remedying. The suspension bridge which was built many years ago when the settlement of inhabitants were few was considered to handle all traffic for years to come, but at the present time the bridge practically is nothing more than a footpath spanning the broad Willamette where people, automobiles, teams, etc., are continually crossing, which is not much different than driving teams and automobiles up the sidewalk in Oregon City and expecting every one to get out of the other fellows way. This is practically the only crossing on the Willamette between Portland and Salem. There is practically no place for safety on this bridge where a pedestrian can seek safety in case of a runaway team or automobile. The approach on this end of the bridge is wholly unsafe for anyone to venture to cross the street, especially children and older ones. It seems possible that a 6-foot walk could be placed on each side of the bridge for a foot walk which would do away with all danger of being run down by a team or automobile. It makes no difference how careful anyone tries to be accidents will happen. If the bridge will not stand a six foot walk on each side then something could be done to remedy the danger on this end of the bridge, a walk from the bridge leading to the sidewalks on each side of the railing. Let something be done which will lessen the chance for accidents such as we have just experienced.

PRICE OF PAPER IS CLIMBING SKYWARD

SECOND ADVANCE OF 10 PER CENT IN EFFECT TODAY—LOCAL MILLS HOLD OUT LONGEST.

A second general rise of 10 per cent in the price of paper throughout the United States is in effect today. The first general increase was made February 1, and affected the paper market through practically all of the United States.

The rise in price is attributed to the increase in the price of chemicals and dyes used in manufacturing paper, which, in turn, is caused by the general scarcity of these staples in the trade owing to the war. Eastern manufacturers have asked jobbers and other dealers to hold down their orders to the lowest possible point, a fact which in itself stamps the present condition as an unusual one in the business.

It is a significant fact that the two mills which stuck to the old price the longest were the Hawley Pulp & Paper company and the Crown Willamette Paper company. The 10 per cent advance made by other companies on the first of this month, was delayed until last Saturday by the two local mills.

LAMAR TOOZE, PEACE DELEGATE, NOW IS ADVOCATE OF PREPAREDNESS AFTER FORD TOUR; SPEAKS BEFORE WIRES

Lamar Tooze, president of the student body of the University of Oregon, and a delegate from Oregon on the Henry Ford peace mission, returned home an advocate of preparedness, and so stated his position at the noonday luncheon of the Commercial club Live Wires Tuesday.

He said that Holland, with an area a trifle greater than that of Harney county, Oregon, had a standing and reserve army six times larger than that of the United States, and yet the world's peace palace is located at The Hague, the capital of Holland.

Mr. Tooze remarked that the chief feature of this wonderful palace of peace is its disuse. He told interesting anecdotes of his trip with the Ford party, and related Mr. Ford's own particular, personal preference for Joe. This is it:

In Detroit a citizen was digging a hole, about 14 feet square, in his back lot one day, when Henry Ford came along, and his curiosity was aroused, and he stopped and asked the man what he was doing.

"I am digging my grave," replied the citizen.

"But," protested Mr. Ford, "why such a big hole. There is room enough there for a dozen men."

"Well," said the man, "you see, I want my Ford to be buried with me. It has pulled me out of many a hole through life, and I want it to pull me out of this hole too."

Mr. Tooze drew the conclusion that the Ford peace party had accomplished, through its demonstration, even though much of the publicity it had received had been unfavorable and replete with ridicule, something toward a world's peace. He was followed by his father, Walter L. Tooze, of Salem, who sharply criticized the administration's policy in Mexican affairs, and said the time would come and would come soon when the United States would be forced to go into Mexico and straighten out the tangle of its internal affairs.

OREGON CITY DOWNS ESTACADA AND NOW CLAIMS THE TITLE

SCORE IS 45 TO 9 IN ROUGH GAME AT ARMY—RETURN GAME NEXT SATURDAY.

The Oregon City high school basketball team defeated the quintet of the Estacada high school at the old army hall Friday night, 45 to 9, and now claims the basketball championship of the county.

Carly and Molalla were defeated early in the season by the county seat team. The next step in the plans of Coach Tatro and Manager Clair Miller is to secure games with Salem and other up-valley towns, aiming to secure, if possible, a claim to the Willamette valley or even western Oregon high school championship. By studying comparative scores, members of the local high school team believe that the school team from the capital city could be easily defeated.

The game Friday night with Estacada was rough from beginning to end. Many fouls were called on both teams. At the end of the first half, the score was 11 to 4, and in the latter half of the game the local team woke up and played in their usual style. A return game will be played at Estacada next Saturday.

The lineups follow:
Estacada—Center, Dale; guards, Denny and Janson; forwards, Warner and Harkentier.
Oregon City—Center, Green; guards, King and Parr; forwards, Miller and Milliken.

EUGENE ATHLETES OUT

BEZDEK AND HAYWARD HAVE THEIR COHORTS AT WORK.

EUGENE, Ore., Feb. 17.—Heads up! On your mark!

These are familiar cries at the University of Oregon athletic grounds during the past two days of balmy weather when, responding to the annual call of Coach Bezdek and "Bill" Hayward, baseball and track coaches, over 50 students are turning out for these sports. The season this year is early, the earliest in years, and it is probable that several long weeks in the gymnasium for the baseball men will have to be undergone yet. Heretofore the season began in the gymnasium, but on the day of Bezdek's call the sun was shining brightly. Three letter men, seven of last year's squad, and 15 freshmen, turned out for the first day. Many students who expected to turn out have not done so yet.

Today stiff arms and sore muscles are the rule among the athletes who overdid their first day's work.

"Bill" is beginning to figure and most any time of the day now he is liable to be on Kinsale field. Every afternoon from 4, or before, he will be found present with a group of men that are turning out for varsity track team work.

One set of bleachers will have to be moved or cut into divisions on the east end of the field to put the track into shape for running purposes.

CLEVELAND TEAM SOLD

NEW OWNERS PLAN TO SPEND MONEY FOR STARS.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 17.—The new owners of the Cleveland American league baseball club are determined to spend money freely to bring a pennant winning team to the Forest City.

This announcement was made today on their behalf by persons close to President Sam Johnson of the American league. Johnson, who is holding title to the club temporarily, will proceed with the plans as laid down by the owners.

A purchasing campaign will begin soon, it is expected; and Johnson will make a strong effort to get some of the best players turned loose when the Federal league disbanded.

Reports today had it that the new owners had paid $500,000 for the Cleveland club. Their identity has not been revealed.

NEW BILLY SUNDAY HERE

EDDIE COLLINS BREAKS INTO "GOSPEL TEAM LEAGUE."

PALMYRIA, N. J., Feb. 21.—Eddie Collins, star second baseman of the White Sox, made a home run hit with 500 persons who heard him break into the "Gospel team" league yesterday afternoon in his first venture as a platform speaker, before a church audience that applauded like world series fans when he handed booze some wallops that would have done credit to Billy Sunday.

To Get the Point, You Read the Story

Two of Foley Kidney Pills taken after each meal and at bedtime, changed Mr. E. A. Shanholtzer from a mighty sick and pain-ridden man to a strong, healthy citizen.
"Kamato, Colo. 'Foley & Co. I am writing this, hoping that some one needing it might see it. I was so troubled with my kidneys and bladder that I could not walk or ride, and had to get up as high as twenty times in one night. A friend persuaded me to try a 50c bottle of Foley Kidney Pills and they helped me wonderfully. I went back and got another bottle and then again another. Now, to all, if you have kidney and bladder trouble and it gets you where it had me, you won't stand back to try a 50c bottle, and you will spend another dollar for more, if you need more, just as cheerfully as you ever spent a five cent piece. Sincerely yours, E. A. Shanholtzer."
