OAK GROVE YOUNG MAN SEES MANY PORTS IN U. S. NAVAL SERVICE

Orval M. Olds, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Olds of Oak Grove, who enlisted in the navy June 18, 1917, received his discharge at Mare Island August 26, and arrived home Saturday, very much to the surprise of his parents, who had given up looking for his discharge at this time. Young Olds upon enlisting went to Mare Island where he received his training. With 1600 others he was taken on board the steamer Great Northern. At Panama City he was transferred to the cruiser Cincinnati. While on this vessel he was promoted until he became chief gun pointer, and as such was given the opportunity of trying his aim on the enemy submarines. For nearly eighteen months he cruised the southern waters on the lookout for submarines, visiting most of the ports in South America and Cuba.

On a return trip to Key West, Florida, he was taken sick with the influenza. Recovering he went to Havana and New Orleans. At the latter city the Cincinnati was taken out of commission, and he was transferred to the Annapolis. He returned to Mare Island via the Panama canal.

Young Olds was highly commended by his superior officer for his action when he was stationed on the lookout of the Great Northern, when by his watchfulness he saved his vessel from being struck by a tramp steamer.

He is now with his father at Golden Dale, Washington, having laid aside the uniform and taken up his work as a civilian.

PROPER VENTILATION OF SCHOOLROOM IS ESSENTIAL MATTER

"If the old deacon sitting in the front pew on Sunday morning becomes drowsy, finally drops off to sleep and disturbs the audience by snoring, the minister is not usually to blame, as is generally supposed," said Frank K. Welles, former assistant state superintendent of public instruction, in speaking to the teachers of Clackamas county at their annual summer school at Oregon City. In cases of this kind the minister is held to blame, the popular supposition being that his sermon is uninteresting; but this is all wrong in the opinion of Mr. Welles, who thinks that neither the minister nor the deacon should be blamed, but that the fault usually lies with the janitor who neglects to properly ventilate the church and allows the air to become overheated and foul from being breathed over and over again.

In speaking from the subject, "How to Hold Attention," Mr. Welles said that it is impossible for the minister to hold the attention of his audience or the teacher of his class unless the temperature and ventilation are properly regulated. If after the Sunday School in the morning the air is not changed, or if following the morning service the church is tightly closed until evening it is no wonder that the audience becomes sluggish and the sermon appears uninteresting. Such conditions in the schoolroom are not only dangerous from the standpoint of health, but they also defeat the efforts of the best teacher to hold the attention and maintain the interest of the pupils.

APPERSON BROTHERS BUILT FIRST HORSELESS CARRIAGE IN 1894

"That such a vehicle could be built was given tangible form in the little buggy which, on July 4, 1894, was pushed out of Elmer Apperson's little Riverside Machine works, where it had been constructed."

So says the Kokomo Tribune on July 4 of this year in an article commemorating the silver anniversary of America's first motor car. Much has been said and written regarding this first "horseless carriage," which will occupy its niche in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, D. C., down through the ages.

But owing to the drifting apart of the men who worked on the little contraption which was destined to revolutionize traffic the world over, its parental origin has been somewhat hazy.

But now, out of this obscurity has come in a definite shape the fact that the Apperson Brothers in co-operation with others did build with their own hands America's first mechanically successful automobile.

The article in the home town paper—where the work was done and where live all the old-timers who have known Elmer and Edgar Apperson a lifetime—substantiates this statement. It proves that the first car was constructed in the Riverside Machine works, owned by the Apperson Brothers. And, if it was built there, who could it be put together by other than the two men who were actively running the shop—Elmer and Edgar Apperson. At last, the parentage of America's first mechanically successful car is settled.

Of all the ground animals that are also tree climbers the leopard is the only one that will run down a vertical trunk head foremost.

ASTORIA PAPER MILL FIRE LOSS $150,000

ASTORIA, Sept. 1.—Fire, starting in a pile of old paper stock in the company's new warehouse completely destroyed the plant of the Astoria Pulp & Paper company early this morning. The loss is estimated at about $150,000. The plant, which had been closed for some time, resumed working recently, and three shifts were being worked. The night gang was on duty, and fought the blaze, which started at 4:30 a. m. for about half an hour before turning in an alarm calling the city fire department. By the time the firefighters reached the scene the mill building, a frame structure, 50 by 150 feet, situated on Young's bay, just east of the city limits, was a roaring furnace, and was soon eaten up by the flames.

INDIANS KEEP FIRES DOWN

HELENA, Mont., Sept. 3.—Two hundred Blackfoot Indians are entitled to a large share of the credit for preventing the spread of forest fires in the Glacier national park, where for many days it seemed as if some of the finest scenery would be scarred or ruined by the blazes, according to Major A. E. McPartridge, former United States agent for the Blackfoot Indians, who has returned from a visit to the park. One fire still is burning in the park, Major McPartridge said, but it is said to be under control. Tourist traffic was held up, not so much because of danger from fires but because the smoke from fires outside the park obscured the view of motorists.
