Teazel Farm is Paying Proposition and is Only Large Farm of the Kind in Country

The historic and justly famous Molalla valley in Clackamas county, where the wealth of a small nation lies in the fertile soil that is still, to a large extent, in its virgin state, and where the influences of cultivation and careful farming have brought from the ground some of the most bountiful crops produced anywhere in Oregon, receives a fine score of praise through an article written by Fred Lockley and published in the Oregon Journal this week. The writer says:

Few sections of Oregon are showing greater activity or more marked progress than Molalla. Pioneer Oregonians know Molalla best by its old name, "Four Corners."

Uncle Billy Vaughn, who settled in the Molalla valley in 1843, waited 70 years for the railroad to come to Molalla. At last it came. In September, 1913, Molalla saw the long hoped for realization of her dream of adequate transportation when the Portland, Eugene & Eastern railway ran its first train from Canby on the main line of the Southern Pacific to Molalla. The road is to be extended to Silverton and eventually electrified.

In February, 1915, Molalla secured additional transportation facilities through the completion of the Willamette Valley Southern railway. Its northern terminus is Oregon City and it traverses a fertile and beautiful section of the Willamette valley, connecting with the branch line of the Southern Pacific at Mount Angel.

Molalla was incorporated a month after the "iron horse" had replaced "Old Buck," the buckskin stage horse that was almost as well known by travelers as Indian Henry, the last of the tribe of the Molalla Indians. At the celebration held in Molalla in September, 1915, when the first train pulled in from Portland, "Old Buck" and Indian Henry were very much in evidence. Indian Henry, the last of his race, wore his suit of buckskin and the beautifully woven spruce root hat surmounted with flicker feathers that had been left to him by his grandfather. Three days later Indian Henry had taken the long trail to the Happy Hunting Grounds of his people.

When Molalla was incorporated it had within its corporate limits 240 residents. Today it has over 600. The first city election was held September 22, 1913. W. W. Everhart being elected mayor. Since Molalla was incorporated, a city water plant has been installed at a cost of $10,000, and two miles of mains have been laid. A 25,000 gallon tank with good pressure furnishes excellent protection against fire. Two and a half miles of sidewalk have been put down and over $2000 has been spent in grading and graveling the streets. A new school house costing $14,000 has been built and several new store buildings, as well as a score or more of substantial and well built residences.

Molalla is the logical trading center for the Molalla valley, or Molalla prairie, as it was formerly called, which consists of over 5000 acres of level land, once largely devoted to wheat raising, but now devoted to diversified farming.

Liberal, Monitor, Union Mills, Scotts Mills, Marquam and Wilhoit are all well known places not far distant from Molalla.

Wilhoit, eight miles to the southward of Molalla, has been a favorite summer resort of the pioneer Oregonians for many decades. The old hotel there, which has been owned and run by F. W. MacLaren for the past 25 or 30 years, burned down not long ago and has been replaced by a commodious hotel built on the plan of the Forestry building, of unbarred logs and having wide and ample porches.

The old time wheat farms of the Molalla valley are being broken up into smaller units and are being changed into dairy ranches, clover fields and orchards. Clover, alfalfa, kale, vetch and corn are being extensively grown. The raising of hogs has become one of the profitable industries of the valley.

One of the largest ginseng farms in the west is located near Molalla and it makes big money for its owner. Another unique industry is Molalla's teazel farm, owned and operated by George H. Gregory, and is the only commercial teazel farm west of the Mississippi river. In fact, it is claimed that Mr. Gregory is the only commercial teazel grower in the United States outside of New York state.

He has 60 acres in teazels and his product won a medal at the Panama-Pacific exposition.

Teazels, it may be explained, are burs which, when properly cut and dried, are used by woolen mills to comb up the blankets and other wool-

MARCHING CLUB IS FESTIVAL FEATURE

PRINCESS ROSE CHARMING MEM-BER OF ROYAL COURT AT ROSE FESTIVAL

The Rose Festival of 1916 is history and will have in the records of such events a place as the most successful and most largely attended celebration ever held. Portland really extended herself, working on shop capital, but with much enterprise and energy, to make the festival this year the best ever. The financial cooperation of the larger towns of the valley and the moral support of the entire state figured extensively in the success of the festival. Clackamas county assisted financially and personally by sending not only large amounts of money to Portland, but large delegations of citizens and the fairest of the many fair maids who were honored with royal rank in the court of Queen Muriel.

As a result of this co-operation on the part of this county the Fallsarians of Oregon City were given a place of honor in the fraternal, military, civic and industrial parade on Friday morning. The Fallsarians, in their natty white suits, cut capers along the line of march that won a great amount of favorable comment, and through its splendid quartette entertained the multitudes with vocal music of a high order. The local marchers were outnumbered and "out-pumped," but by no means were they outdone in enthusiasm and loyalty to the cause of neighborly fellowship.

Fifty Fallsarians, accompanied by the Moose band of this city, took part in the parade and created a very favorable impression. Princess Rose, in regal robes, followed the Fallsarian escort in a very beautiful float prepared by the festival management. Miss Uptegrove was showered with attentions and honors throughout the festival and was perhaps the most royal mannered and becoming young woman of the several who were maids of honor.

Following the long parade the Fallsarians and their ladies were entertained at luncheon by the Royal Rosarians of Portland. A real banquet, even to the speeches, was greatly enjoyed by the Oregon City marchers, who have voted the Rosarians hearty hosts.

The Fallsarians made the trip to Portland aboard a special car and returned at their pleasure after the parade. Although the drilling of the club was very good and its appearance excellent it was out-numbered and out-classed, to the extent of musicians in club uniform, by the Cherrians of Salem, who took the prize for civic entries. The next trip to be taken by the local club will probably be to the Salem Cherry fair.

Much credit is due to Thomas C. Burke, Homer-Hollowell, Garland Hollowell and Victor Gault for their excellent vocal work along the line of march and at the luncheon at the Chamber of Commerce. The singing was one of the most popular features of the big parade, judged from the applause it elicited.

on products and make them soft and fluffy. He markets his teazel all over the world, but mostly in London.

W. A. Shaver, one of the largest breeders of cattle in Clackamas county, lives in Molalla valley. He has a 500-acre farm and finishes and markets about 100 head of Durham and Hereford grade steers each year. He also raises Lincoln and Cotswold sheep and blooded horses.

Widewater Farm, owned by C. Daugherty and his sons, Fred G. and Otis R. Daugherty, is one of the show places of Molalla valley. This farm won two gold medals at the Panama-Pacific exposition, one on spring oats, the other on spring wheat. Both Fred and Otis are O. A. C. boys and they are firm believers in "book farming." They raise "pedigreed seed." The hit-or-miss, dark-of-the-moon methods of farming do not appeal to them. They analyze their soil, build it up and plant the crop best adapted to that particular type of soil. Their seed cleaning plant is operated by water power and they are demonstrating that brains pay on the farm as well as in the counting house.

There is a large amount of timber tributary to Molalla which will eventually be handled through Molalla. Molalla and the other towns along the line of the Willamette Valley Southern have a bright future and in time to come the Molalla valley and its surrounding foothills will be thickly settled and intensively cultivated.

WOULD HAVE CITY OWN POWER PLANT

COUNCIL WILL MEET TO DIS-CUSS MAYOR'S IDEA TO CREATE CITY SERVICE

EXPERT TO BE AT MEETING

City Owned Electric Plant Would Be Profitable Investment
Says Mayor

Municipal ownership in connection with an electric light and power plant in Oregon City, is to be thoroughly investigated and discussed at a meeting of the city council, which probably will be held early next week. Mayor E. C. Hackett, one of the city officials most interested in the creation of a municipal power plant here, has arranged for the attendance of Frank C. Kelsey, of Portland, at the council meeting. Mr. Kelsey has built a large number of municipal power plants and irrigation systems on the Pacific coast and in the east and is considered an expert in this particular field.

All the members of the aldermanic body seem favorable to the erection of such a plant as Mayor Hackett proposes if the proper plans can be determined upon and if the project is supported by the voters when the matter is submitted to them on the ballot.

The mayor's proposal has also received the hearty endorsement of some of the heaviest property owners in the city and at the meeting which is to be held these people will probably enter into the discussion with the council and Mr. Kelsey.

Other cities on the coast, having less favorable conditions for the maintenance of a municipal electric power plant, are finding their ventures very successful and profitable. Among these Mayor Hackett points to McMinnville, where the plant is run by steam created by burning cord wood at $3.00 a cord. In spite of this handicap McMinnville officials, who have visited Mayor Hackett here, testify that the plant is a paying one and that it is giving general satisfaction to the citizens and patrons.

Oregon City is in a particularly good position for the erection of the proposed plant, Mayor Hackett thinks. When the water power site owned by the city was sold to the Hawley interests the contract called for the reservation of a space sufficient for the development of 5000 horsepower, to be used by the city whenever it should be demanded. The power is more than will ever be required and the site is ideal for the location of a plant. The pumps and water wheels are already installed and that considerable item of expense is, therefore, settled.

Predicting a favorable decision in the courts regarding the city's title to south Main street property which is claimed by the P. R. L. & P. Co., Mayor Hackett sees no reasonable argument unfavorable to the proposition of which he is an ardent advocate. The matter of the title to the Main street property is pending in the circuit court and regardless of the decision of that tribunal, the question will, no doubt, be submitted to the state supreme court for a final decision. The establishment of title to this property is important to the city's interest and to the proposed power plant.

The plant at McMinnville cost the taxpayers of that city $55,000, and it is generally conceded that the expenditure was a worthy one. Officials of that city estimate that, with part of the plant already installed here, the cost for a complete plant and distributing system, including street poles and wires, would not exceed $75,000, for which amount the municipality will probably be bonded in case the council decides favorably upon the proposition and in case the voters, to whom it will be offered for approval, see the merits that are supposed to exist.

"Oregon City could be the richest city on the coast and by far the richest of its size in the nation," said Mayor Hackett, "if she had conserved her wonderful water powers when they should have been conserved. The revenue from that power would bring vast wealth to the community. It was not conserved, however, and apparently the most beneficial way to counteract the crime of its loss to the city is to make the best use of what remains of it through the erection of a municipal water plant."

Flags Presented

A notable observance of flag day was that conceived by E. T. Mass, proprietor of the Mass hotel and restaurant, who presented on that day to each customer entering the establishment a small and very pretty American flag. Mr. Mass gave away a great number of the national emblems during the day.

J. E. WERLEIN SPEAKS OF GREATER THINGS

REAL OPTIMIST ENTERTAINS
LIVE WIRE MEETING.
REPORTS HEARD

"He talked of nothing save and except the upbuilding of a greater city," Ed. Werlein, of Portland, directed this was said of his stirring discourse at the Live Wire luncheon at the Commercial club on Tuesday. But Mr. Werlein did not stop when he had talked of a greater city. His topic, though treated in a most up-to-date manner, was "The Feast of Belshazzar." Under that head Mr. Werlein talked of everything from the stealing of Queen Rose on Booster day, an action directed by him, to the national political situation, and he spoke thoughtfully of construction, not only municipally but nationally and personally.

In his glib way, with the accent of Louisiana but little tainted by the broader speech of the northern clime where Mr. Werlein has lived for a quarter-century, he dealt with subjects for thinking men, praised Oregon City and chided those who would call it a "town" when the evidence of its being a real city is on every side. He asked for both inter-city harmony and for inter-city helpfulness, laying great stress upon the importance of these things toward the best interests of the entire state.

Although the speaker is of the opposite political inclination, he commended President Wilson to the hearty support of every citizen. "Mr. Wilson is 'our' president," declared Mr. Werlein, "and as such is entitled to the hearty support of the nation in dealing with the problems before him. This cry of hard times, when money is bulging from the doors of the banks of the country, is brought about mostly through politics and political depreciation of the president."

The Live Wire program committee, Rev. J. K. Hawkins chairman, provided one of the most popular speakers and one of the most entertaining it could possibly have secured when it enlisted the interest of Mr. Werlein.

George Randall reported upon the success of the armory committee's attendance upon the county court. Prospects are bright for the inclusion of the armory appropriation on the county budget this fall, according to the statement of Mr. Randall.

Roadmaster Roots announced the completion of the Parkplace road surfacing and after the luncheon accompanied a number of Live Wires on an inspection trip over the new road.

Main Trunk Howland appointed a committee to investigate the matter of improving a road through Gladstone. The river road or the East 82nd street road is slated for improvement. This committee included H. E. Williams, B. T. McBain and Mr. Starkweather.

MANY FARMERS ENJOY VISIT TO STOCKYARDS

PROGRAM IN HONOR OF PARTY IS INTERESTING AND

Four carloads of farmers living along the line of the Willamette Valley Southern, composed an excursion party to the Portland Union Stock yards on Monday and were the guests of the management of that important institution at a meeting combining education and pleasure. Approximately 250 people made the trip to Portland.

The Clackamas county farmers were conducted about the great livestock plant and familiarized themselves with the methods of handling stock from the point of shipment until it passed into the hands of the retail butcher, or the meat packing plants. The interest of the guests was manifested to the posts in many ways and there is little doubt that the trip will prove of great benefit to the breeders of livestock within this county.

The farmers were royally entertained throughout their stay in North Portland and at the luncheon held for them at the noon hour they were greeted not only by a number of prominent Portland business men, but by officials of the company which was host for the day. President Franklin T. Griffith of the P. R. L. & P. Co., Emory Olmstead of the Northwestern National bank, Portland, John F. Carroll, a Portland newspaper man, and C. C. Colt, president of the Union Meat company and of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, made brief talks at the luncheons and subjects appropriate to the occasion and of interest to the guests. Other speakers were Judge Grant B. Dimick of Oregon City and C. E. Spence, Master of the state grange.

O. M. Plummer, C. M. McCallister, L. R. McGee and E. E. Faville were prominent in arranging the program for the farmers and saw to it that the Clackamas county excursion party was provided with something to draw its interest during every minute of the time that was spent at the stock yards. Farmers from as far distant as Mt. Angel in Marion county were members of the excursion party.

SCHOOL SQUABBLE NOT YET SETTLED

MR. AND MRS. CARTLIDGE ARE INDEPENDENT IN FIGHT AGAINST TOOZE

MINER DOES NOT FEAR SUIT

Bulletin No. 1 Explained by Author.
Friends Favor High School
English Teacher

There seems to be no attempt at finching on the part of C. G. Miner former principal of the Oregon City high school, or on the part of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Cartlidge, the latter instructor in the English department of the high school, because of the slander suit filed against the former or similar actions threatened against the Cartlidges by City School Superintendent F. J. Tooze.

In fact, the flinching would seem to be anywhere but on the side of the defendants in the actions started and threatened, because, according to attorneys, there was an attempt made to have the threatened suits counter-acted against the charges made by Mr. Miner so that the entire school squabble would be thrown from the brilliant and very disgraceful limelight into which it has been drawn. The suit against Mr. Miner is in progress, but the actions against Mr. and Mrs. Cartlidge have not found further growth at this time than that contained in the threat of the superintendent.

It appears that both of those mentioned in damage suits are willing to have their cases heard in court, and in truth, since Mr. Tooze has taken this drastic step, he seems himself to welcome an attempt to present his case in the courts.

Mr. Miner explains his inactivity in connection with the hearing invited by State Superintendent Churchill, to be held at Salem, by saying that the expense of such a trial would be all upon his shoulders and that made such a hearing out of the question. Mr. Miner would have had to have witnesses at Salem and as the state board has no power to summon such witnesses or to pay their expenses, Mr. Miner says that he would not submit his charges at Salem. He suggests that, had things been as they should be, this hearing could have been conducted at this city before the school board and with Mr. Churchill in attendance, but that the board seemed unwilling for this arrangement.

In the opinion of Mr. Miner the action against him will not hold water and in the action threatened against Mr. and Mrs. Cartlidge their hearty reception of it seems to ally any fears as to their guilt. Friends of Mr. Cartlidge have praised him for the courage he has shown in his willingness to champion the cause of the teachers of the high school who have resigned because of the friction with the superintendent. The expression of a majority of the high school pupils seems also to be very unfavorable to the official.

Mr. and Mrs. Cartlidge are absolutely independent of any motive in the trouble other than a desire to see fair play for all. They have no concern with the case of the other principal in the fight against Mr. Tooze and the suits threatened against them have no bearing on that brought against Mr. Miner and are not based upon anything done by them in connection with Mr. Miner's fight. It is a rumor that says Mr. Miner's part in the fight is more personal than it should be, while Mr. Cartlidge claims no motive other than that expressed in Bulletin No. 1.

Many friends of Mrs. Cartlidge, who has been popular in the schools of this city for ten years, find the threats against them very distasteful and wonder that she has been singled out for attack by Mr. Tooze. Mrs. Cartlidge was for four years a teacher in the grade schools here and for the past six years has been head of the English department of the high school. She has made innumerable friends in that time, not only by her brilliant work with the pupils, but because of her pleasant personality.

To The Courier Mr. Cartlidge explained his own position and that of his wife; especially in connection with Bulletin No. 1, an anonymous circular, by saying:

"Bulletin No. 1 was in no way responsible for the present trouble. It was issued two months ago with the sincere desire to bring an end to the strife which was then at its height, and which had prevailed not only from the beginning of this year but last year and years before. It was issued after the matter had been taken up with several taxpayers and why its straight-forward statement of facts so upset the city superintendent is a mystery. It was no more than an editorial appeal for a square deal all round 'alike to superintendent, teachers and pupils,' and a soft-pedal protest to the board for not hearing the teachers and sifting the matter to the bottom and settling it once for all. It left the outcome

MANY PUPILS ADDED TO GRADUATE LIST

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT
GRANTS DIPLOMAS TO 78
JUNE GRADUATES

By issuing 78 diplomas to those who were graduated from the eighth grades of the Clackamas county schools in June the total number to be graduated this term was brought up to 453, somewhat under the estimate of the county superintendent, still larger than the classes of last year. These figures do not include the pupils who were graduated from the Oregon City schools, which are in a separate district.

Most of the schools of the county close in May and for that reason the largest number of pupils, 346, received diplomas in that month. The examination papers for June have been graded by Superintendent Calavan and Supervisor Vedder and diplomas awarded to the following children:

Ernest Keller, Joseph Huranek, Katie Hofstetter, William Miettunen, Walter Hofstetter, Annie Roberts, L. nora Beatie, Gertrude Bohlander, Ella Lund, Marion Tucker, Walter Painter, James Stewart, Claud Montgomery, Herman Buse, Harry Zirbel, Mildred Pickle, Pearl Harless, William Shoemaker, Bessie Echerd, Bertha Moore, Wilford Hammer, William Oldenstadt, Carrie Degman, Iva Borland, George Elligsen, Frances Graham, Cassie Beck, Alice Olson, Lillian Thomas, Lester Stuckey, Myrtle Hoffmeister, Alice Carothers, Robert Hand, Richard Warren, Paul Yoder, Homer Fredrickson, Theodore Wold, Grace Davids, Lottie de Neui, Clifford Thomas, Everett Rosecrans, Ethel Rippley, Arthur Lindsey, Mary Bonsall, Annie Bonsall, Helen Johnson, Hazel Kier, Henrietta Adams, Henry Young, Walter Cristenson, La Vern Marton, Lottie Meir, Harold Kuks, Carl Berg, Lois Hamblin, Sivilla Dennison, Frances Griffiths, Alvina Roth, Mildred Wetzler, Millie Mayer, Hazel Wood, Florence Bullard, Margaret Huddleston, Karl Permin, Jennie Thompson, Bethel Smith, Oscar Knutson, Leslie son, Elsie Nash, Grace Peterson, Lindborg, Lester Eron, Gertrude Edwards, Edwin Roabe, Wilhelm Schmidt, Golda Lowe, Neil Campbell, Merle Whiteie, William Gutperlet.

MYSTERY SOLVED

Grass Growth Not Planted on J. Q. Adams Street

The mystery of John Quincy Adams street has been solved by City Engineer Miller and a crew of workmen who started this morning tearing up the pavement damaged by a growth of grass which punctured and practically destroyed the surface.

Common suspicion was that the grass seed was planted just before the surface was laid, but Mr. Miller finds the growth to be the same as that which covered the same area before the surfacing was applied. The grass is common to certain low land sections and is known as horse-tail grass.

On J. Q. Adams street this grass has sent its tender shoots through a solid four inches of asphaltic concrete surface and had so punctured the surface as to make a practically solid greensward on the pavement and destroyed the surface by the large holes it made. The grass itself and its roots seem tender enough, but their penetrating ability is marvelous when they can break through such a surface as that on J. Q. Adams street. Mr. Miller says, in case the growth of his hearing to the integrity of the board who had elected this man and surely he would have received fair treatment at their hands. Bulletin No. 1 expressed the opinion that the public would stand behind their decision. But that hearing seems to have been side-stepped until now most of the teachers have gone, and the charges have been sifted down to about two words and the matter thrown into the courts.

"The superintendent's attorney has stated he is not after damages, but the honor of his client. If this is true their request would have brought a hearing before the board without cost to anyone. Do they mistrust the justice of the school board?"

"Bulletin No. 1 made charges against no one, but was prompted solely by a deplorable condition. You may analyze it word for word and there is not a libelous or slanderous statement in it, and the bluff of a libel suit upon such grounds is ridiculous. And to attempt to discredit Mrs. Cartlidge by the threat of a separate suit against her for her letter of resignation written solely to the board without mention of a name or position, is little short of a crime in itself.

"Such suits are deplorable and disgusting to the public in general and are destructive to the community welfare. The only result will be loss of prestige, loss of students and loss of revenue.

"I claim no distinction as a bluffer or caller of bluffs, and I think this is a matter solely for the school board to settle, but as I have stated before, if by any hook or crook such a suit would redound to the welfare of our schools and community, both Mrs. Cartlidge and myself are ready."

COMPANY ALLOWED A NEW FRANCHISE

COUNCIL GRANTS PERMISSION TO P. R. L. & P. CO., FOR TRACKAGE

TABLED BUSINESS REGALLED

Papers Being Prepared for Re-
Assessment of the Tenth Street Sewers

That the statements made recently by officials of the P. R. L. & P. Co., regarding the financial condition of the company are not in the least exaggerated is evidenced by the report of the Public Service commission of Oregon and the expression of Thomas K. Campbell of the commission. For some time the transit company, which has heavy holdings in Clackamas county, has complained that it was losing money. As a usual thing such statements when concerning large corporations are taken by the public with a grain of salt.

The jitney lawlessness is blamed for the condition of the company's treasury. It is said, and repeated by Mr. Campbell, that jitney competition is costing the company $1500 daily and adding to this the heavy costs for taxes and tolls it is evident that the corporation is in a predicament.

Mr. Campbell foresees the suffering of the street railway company when he makes the following public statement. Coming from one not interested in the company itself, his remarks have carried the true condition into the minds of many who were skeptical regarding the statements made by the company's officials.

Mr. Campbell says: "The P. R. L. & P. Co., if conditions do not change for the better, will be compelled in a short time to come to the commission for relief."

"I am not speaking for the commission," Mr. Campbell said, "but I am telling the results of the information I have gained from a three year study of the situation."

"I am holding no brief for the P. R. L. & P. Co., but I am simply stating conditions as they exist. The company is giving as good, or better, service than any similar company in the United States."

"Jitney competition is costing the company $1500 a day, taken from the cream of the company's business. Light and power competition is taking the cream of that classification of the company's service out of the downtown district. Twenty cents out of every dollar of gross revenue earned by the company is paid to the city and county governments for bridge tolls, street improvement assessments and similar charges.

"Portland and other communities cannot or will not regulate the jitney operation, with the result that the cream of the traffic is handled by the jitney, which pays no tolls for bridge or street use, or gives no revenue.

"The result of this is that the company is, and has been, operating at a loss, even figured on the basis of valuations allowed by the commission. The outcome will be, in my opinion, that the company will be forced to come to the commission for relief."

"I do not know what plan the commission can adopt in such an event. It would be a serious step to charge more than five cents for street car fare from the suburban districts of the city. It would mean a serious depreciation of property values outside the five cent zone and great loss to the people who have purchased property in those districts."

"I do not want to hazard a statement of what may come in the future. I am only stating facts from knowledge gained from the investigations that have just been concluded."

TENT CITY STARTS AT GLADSTONE PARK

INDICATION POINTS TO ENCAMP-
MENT OF ONE THOUSAND AT CHAUTAUQUA

Chautauqua time, that delightful period of combined rest, recreation and education, looked forward to each year by thousands of Clackamas and Multnomah county people, will soon roll round again. On July 7, the 23rd annual assembly of the pioneer Willamette Valley assembly will open at Gladstone park for a 13-day session.

Word comes from chautauqua headquarters that everything is in tip-top shape for the 1916 chautauqua. Fifteen thousand official booklets were sent to all parts of the county this week from the office of the secretary, while at the park a small army of workmen has been engaged in painting and renovating the various chautauqua buildings and getting the grounds in shape for the big program.
