"PIONEER NIGHT" AT CITY COUNCIL

THREE FORMER MEMBERS ADDRESS CITY DADS UPON PENDING QUESTIONS

JITNEYS AND SEWERS FOUGHT

Southern Pacific Tells City Dads It is Satisfied with Eleventh Street Crossing, but Roake Is Not

The regular April meeting of the city council Wednesday night played to a full house, and added attractions to the usual vaudeville were the appearances of three former councilmen. Jitneys and sewers filled up the major portion of the evening, though some business was transacted.

The ball started rolling right after the minutes had been read, when City Engineer Miller confided to the council that Oregon City wasn't as big as it used to be. The Willamette river, he said, had washed away some of the property west of Main street, and on account of this erosion the assessment of several parcels of land for the Main street sewer district was at fault and would have to be corrected. Mr. Miller presented the corrected figures, and the recorder was ordered to change the assessment rolls.

This being disposed of, Recorder Loder read a letter from the state railroad commission, enclosing a communication from the Southern Pacific railway and approving it. The Southern Pacific said its experts had investigated the crossing at Eleventh street, and found it in fine shape. Councilman Roake took issue with the railroad and maintained that the crossing was in bad shape, that the alarm bell didn't always ring, and that the territory was dangerous. Mr. VanAuken said he had inspected the crossing, and that it was all right, and that Mr. Moore had been with him and would bear him out that the alarm signal rang whenever a train passed. Mr. Moore said that the bell didn't always ring, and that the crossing was dangerous. He thought a watchman ought to be placed there.

Mr. VanAuken was surprised at this, and said if the bell didn't ring, it should be made to ring. Mr. Metzner thought so too, and moved that the matter of fixing up the crossing be referred back to the committee again—and back it went. This crossing has been in committee and out of committee for over two years now.

Meade Post, No. 2, G. A. R. was given $75 by the council to help in properly observing Decoration day. Remonstrances against the assessments in Sewer District No. 10 were then taken up. There was standing room only in the council, and it took 20 minutes to read the remonstrances. Mayor Hackett said he thought the assessment matter had been considered a special meeting in the future, and didn't seem very important.

City Engineer Miller explained that the assessments already levied were to cover the cost of work already done. Mr. Hackett said this work wasn't of much use, as a lot of people couldn't use the sewer.

Mr. Miller then went into a history of the sewer, said the city had spent $23,000 on it already, and that the assessment had been reduced to a square foot basis. People who could connect with the completed part of the sewer were assessed one cent per square foot of their holdings, and other folk in the district were assessed half a cent, and would have to pay the remaining half cent when the sewer was extended to their property.

Many property owners spoke about the matter. One said that he was assessed $38.12 for one lot supposed to be served by the sewer, yet that during the recent high water his lot had been covered with 14 feet of moisture that wouldn't run off into the sewer. Another man said his lot was worth $100, and he was assessed $30 for a sewer that hadn't been completed to it.

Then appeared the first of the "pioneers" of the evening. Former Councilman James Wilkinson, who said he had served under three or four mayors, talked about the sewer a little bit.

"I have two lots," he said, "between Main street and Railroad avenue, or Center street. There is a sewer on each of these streets, and former councils gave me the privilege of connecting with it, and then dug a trench 120 feet long to the other sewer and connected with that. I supposed they would let me alone, but they assessed me the full amount for each sewer. I paid that—both those assessments—and now they are coming and wanting me to pay for a third sewer that I can't even use. I have paid out $2,500 in street assessments in this town, and I've never taken a cent of the city's money, either as salary for office or other."

ROADMASTER IS NAMED

T. A. Roots to Have Complete Control of County Highway Work

The appointment of T. A. Roots, of Clackamas, as county roadmaster, was announced last week by the county court. The appointment was made some days before it was publicly announced. As roadmaster Mr. Roots will have absolute control of county highway matters, and will be responsible to the people for the condition of the roads. He is an experienced road man, has made a notable record in the past; and it is generally believed that his appointment will put an end to the catch-as-catch-can system of road making that has prevailed in the county for so long. Co-operation of supervisors will greatly assist Mr. Roots in his work. The appointment of Mr. Roots meets with general approval about the county seat. It is regarded as a business-like step on the part of the county court, and doth efficiency and economy are expected to result. Among those who give the fullest approval to the appointment are H. E. Cross, who said, when speaking about it:

"It seems ridiculous to think that the county has heretofore permitted the supervisor in each district to be absolute boss of the roads in that district, without any executive head to direct co-operation. Just suppose that the Southern Pacific, for example, said to every section boss between here and San Francisco 'here is so much money, now spend it any way you want on the track of your section.' Just imagine 49 section bosses buying their own rails, their own ties, and doing the work the way they wanted to, without any general supervision. Do you think the railroad would be comfortable to travel on? Yet that is what we have been doing in road affairs in this county. I think the appointment of a roadmaster is a big step in advance, and I hope that the supervisors will co-operate with Mr. Roots for the good of the roads in all districts."

Other county seat men, interested in the highway problems, felt much the same as did Mr. Cross about the matter; and the county court members were congratulated on their selection of Mr. Roots for the place.

CHICKENS OPEN DOOR

Trained Fowls Also Close up Coop at Night at Pipe Line Intake

Johnny Morris, who is watchman at the intake of the South Fork pipe line, has five trained chickens and a rooster. The fowls lock up their chicken coop each night, and in the morning they unlock it and walk out through the open door. At least City Engineer Miller says they do, and he ought to know, for he was up there Sunday.

The Morris chickens live in a country that at night is infested with cougar, wildcats, weasels and other things that are bad for fowls' health. Also Mr. Morris isn't always home at bedtime, so he has devised a means of safeguarding his birds that is unique. The chief feature of the plan is a moveable perch on which the fowls roost. Attached to this perch is a cord leading to the chicken-house door. Attached to the other side of the door is a 12-pound rock on a pulley.

When the chickens are off the perch, the 12-pound rock pulls the door open, and the fowls are free to enter and leave their home. At night when they come in to roost, and all climb on the perch, their combined weight causes the bar to drop downward, and this in turn pulls on the rope that shuts the door. In the morning when the chickens wake up and hop down from the perch, releasing their weight, the 12-pound rock pulls the door open.

Mr. Morris may patent this patent, self-sealing hen-roost, and if he does he will become a very, very rich man—maybe.

INDIAN ON LONG HIKE

Wager for $10,000 Said to Be Impetus for Trip Across Continent

Clad in a blue coat and pink trousers, White Eagle, a "Chicago" Indian of mixed blood, arrived in the county seat Monday about 800 miles ahead of two white men, with whom he is walking from the Windy City to the Pacific Ocean and back again for a wager of $10,000. At least White Eagle says that is why he blossomed out into town in such noticeable regalia. The two white men, according to his story, were already badly beaten; and by winning the wager White Eagle expects to prove the superiority of the red race to the white.

White Eagle has followed the railroads on his hike, and since October 16 of last year, when he started on his jaunt, has worn out 12 pairs of shoes. He expects to complete the journey in 14 months from the time he started. In the county seat he was followed by a gang of admiring small boys and two dogs.

Elevator Has Fit

The Oregon City municipal lift went on a rampage late last week, and without much warning rose gracefully to the top of the shaft when the operator tried to make it go down to the bottom. Jack Confer was operating the elevator at the time, and he and his passengers were both considerably disturbed.

HEDGES' RAID ON FRITZ A SUCCESS

OVER FORTY QUARTS OF LIQUOR SEIZED AT BELLE HOTEL, MILWAUKIE

DISTRICT ATT'Y TRIUMPHS

Raid Is Complete Surprise to Proprietor, Who Is Caught Trying to Pour Evidence out of Bottle

District Attorney Gilbert L. Hedges Wednesday night raided the Hotel Belle at Milwaukie, arrested Fritz Boysen, the proprietor, and confiscated over 40 quarts of assorted liquors and beer. Boysen was caught red-handed trying to pour out some of the whiskey that was behind the bar, and caches of booze were found in various parts of the resort at Milwaukie.

The raid was scheduled to have come off three weeks ago, but Boysen was tipped off at that time, and for awhile got rid of all his stock of liquor, according to Deputy District Attorney Thomas A. Burke, who participated in the raid. The district attorney's office has had a man watching the resort for the past month and a half, and when word was received from this man early in the week that Fritz "had recovered from his nervousness," the plans for the raid were laid.

Leaving Oregon City by automobile, part of the raiding party went to the sanitarium at Island station, on the interurban line, and there met the balance of the officers who participated in the little surprise party. Each man was assigned to a certain station within the resort, and when the raiders entered every man went to his post. As the district attorney started for the rear of the establishment, Boysen rushed behind the bar, grasped a bottle of whiskey, and started pouring it out on the floor.

M. H. Hughes, one of the official party, saw him, and shouted a warning, and Deputy District Attorney Burke made a rush for Boysen and secured the bottle before all of its contents had been spilled.

A search of the premises revealed 24 quarts of beer in one cache, which Boysen declared was the personal property of the cook. The cook, being later interrogated, denied any ownership of the stuff, and it was confiscated along with a jug of wine hidden beneath a napkin in the breadbox, some cognac brandy, a bottle or two of California wine, and an ample supply of hard liquor. Boysen was given the alternative of putting up a thousand dollars bail or coming to the county jail with the raiding party; and eventually decided to put up the cash.

Those on the raiding party were District Attorney Hedges, his deputy Mr. Burke, Chief of Police Blanchard of Oregon City, Constable D. E. Frost, M. H. Hughes, deputy sheriffs Riley, Mullan, VanHam and O'Neil, and Sheriff Wilson. The raid was a complete surprise, and was carried out without a hitch. The district attorney's office has been accumulating evidence against the resort for some time, and has simply been waiting an opportune time to simultaneously make a seizure and an arrest.

Several little supper parties were disturbed when the raiders entered, and two fair young women made a dash from the building before guards had been posted at all the doors. While the raiding party was still in the place a callow youth from Portland and a young woman in festive clothes arrived by automobile; but they didn't tarry very long.

Boysen will be held to the grand jury, charged with violating the prohibition laws.

Boysen was arraigned before Justice of the Peace Sievers Thursday morning and pleaded not guilty to the charge of selling intoxicating liquors. Justice Sievers fixed bail at $1000 cash, which was the sum asked by District Attorney Hedges following the raid, to insure Boysen's appearance Thursday. Boysen had no difficulty in raising this amount.

H. THISSEN HONORED

Clackamas County Man Elected President of New Stock Association

H. Thissen, of Concord, was Saturday morning elected president of the Columbia Jersey Cattle club, which was organized at a meeting in the office of the Rural Spirit in Portland; and which will represent up-to-date stock raisers in Clackamas, Multnomah, Columbia and Clatsop counties. The organization meeting was well attended, and several addresses were made. Charles Cleveland was elected secretary.

Among those present and taking an active part in the organization meeting were William M. Ladd, B. C. Altman, Charles Cleveland, Harry West, J. W. Samuels and Mr. Thissen. The purpose of the organization will be to encourage the breeding of Jersey cattle, and the holding of annual sales of blooded, pedigreed stock.

EVERY DAY SEES A NEW SUBSCRIBER'S NAME ON THE COURIER'S BOOKS

Rival newspapers, that are making desperate efforts to bolster up their circulation, will tell you that the Courier is losing steadily in its circulation. They don't care what they say—they feel the opposition of the Courier, and they are trying futilely to offset it. The Courier isn't making any campaign for circulation. It isn't giving away books, cheap crockery or other premiums to coax people to take it. It is simply printing the news of Clackamas county, and printing it straight and undisguised. And because of this the Courier is growing. During February the Courier got 30 new subscribers—better than one a day. Thirty people came into the Courier office, or wrote in, and put up a dollar for the Courier for a year. That doesn't look as if the Courier was losing circulation does it? Remember the Courier isn't muzzled, it isn't subservient to any interests, and it isn't afraid to print anything that is worth while printing.

CANDIDATE HAS PROPHETIC NAME

ROSE UPTEGROVE PICKED AS OREGON CITY'S CHOICE FOR BIG FESTIVAL

VIGOROUS CAMPAIGN PLANNED

County Seat Contestant for Royal Honors Is Popular Maid of Winsome, Attractive Personality

It will be "Queen Rose" at the Portland Rose Festival this year if Oregon City and Clackamas county have their way about it. That was settled Wednesday night of this week, when a committee of seven bachelors picked Miss Rose Uptegrove, of Oregon City, as the county seat's candidate in the big contest to pick a ruler of Oregon's great annual gala week. And the committee who did the selecting believe that as the candidate's name is Rose, she will win many votes from people outside of the county who will think that a rose city, during a rose festival, ought to have a rose for a queen.

Miss Rose Uptegrove is nineteen years old, and has lived in Oregon City for four years. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Uptegrove, and was born in Oklahoma. She is a most popular young woman, fair to look upon, bright, vivacious and winsome, and received the unanimous choice of the committee. The seven bachelors who selected Miss Rose as the young lady to bear Oregon City's standard in the friendly battle for royal honors are J. D. Olson, H. A. Swafford, H. Leighton Kelly, H. E. Draper, Charles T. Parker, Dr. Frank Mount and Dr. J. A. VanBrakle.

H. Leighton Kelly will manage the campaign for Miss Rose, and expects to pile up a winning vote for her. The election of Queen of the Rose Festival will be by votes published in the newspapers, and by votes that she can be purchased at the rate of ten for a cent from the Festival association and its representatives.

Miss Uptegrove was genuinely surprised when she was told of the honor that had been thrust upon her. Blushing with happiness, and with her eyes sparkling at the prospect of ruling over Oregon's great summer festival, she pledged herself to do all that she could to win for Oregon City, and to be a loyal and lovable ruler if elected.

Arbitration Wanted

At their weekly luncheon on Tuesday, members of the Live Wires of the Oregon City Commercial club adopted resolutions expressing the hope that the difficulties between the railroad trainmen and engineers and the nation's transportation lines might be settled by arbitration. It was pointed out that a general railroad strike at this time would prove a great disaster for the entire country, would demoralize freight movements and embarrass passenger traffic, and might seriously discommode a large number of citizens not directly concerned in the trouble. The railroad men are asking for a straight eight-hour day, and the railroads say that to grant the request would greatly increase operating expenses, forcing the public to pay more for transportation.

Judge Grant B. Dimick and George W. Buck have purchased the herd of big-type, pure bred Poland China hogs heretofore owned by the Nichols farm, at Parkplace.

OREGON JYNX IS WELL DESCRIBED

COURIER READERS TELL REASON FOR STATE'S APPARENT BACKWARDNESS

REMEDIES READILY SEEN, TOO

Letters Sent in Answer to Inquiry Show Clackamas County Folk Deeply Interested in State

A month or so ago the Courier asked its readers what they thought about certain comparisons that had been drawn between Oregon and Washington. It will be recalled that certain statistics were printed which showed beyond question that Washington, with not as favorable climatic conditions as Oregon, had developed far more rapidly than has the Beaver state. And in presenting these statistics, the Courier asked its readers what they believed the Oregon "jynx" to be—asked them how they could account for Oregon's retarded development, and what they believed to be the remedy.

Many answers were received to the Courier's inquiries. The gist of some of these replies has already been printed on the editorial page. And here are presented some more of the reasons given by Courier readers—and also some suggestions for bettering things. Space does not permit the publication in full of the letters received, but the answers given have been "bottled down," and the chief features are here presented.

Oregon's development has been retarded because of the conflict between the ideas of her people and the power of special interests that did not desire to see these ideas put into practice.

Oregon's development has been retarded because much of the state has been "bottled up" by railroads that have failed to build transportation lines into territory not directly controlled by themselves.

Oregon has been cursed with newspapers that have distorted news regarding the state and what the people of the state have been doing.

Oregon has had too much politics.

Oregon people have been too prone to look back to the pioneers for guidance and inspiration, and have not looked ahead; they have been satisfied to do things "the old way," instead of trying to find more efficient methods.

Oregon has suffered greatly from the fact that vast stretches of land have been held for investment by groups of men whose interests were all allied.

Oregon has not given "new blood" a chance; young men and women have not been promoted into positions of trust and leadership. When openings have occurred, older men from Eastern points have been imported into the state to fill them, and Oregon's "new blood" has been thrust aside or held down.

That's about the way those who have answered the Courier's inquiry as to the "Oregon jynx" have seen the trouble. In short, they have said that Oregon has been "hide bound," that she has been ruled by men who all take their orders from a clique of Portlanders who virtually control the state's resources because they control the land. Oregon hasn't been given a chance.

As remedies for this condition, the Courier's readers suggest the following things:

Giving Oregon men and women a chance to hold down the "big jobs" as vacancies occur—promoting Oregon men and women when chance for promotion is found, and not sending East for people.

Opening up of the state's resources by railroad construction into sections now not thickly settled.

Election of men to legislative and other executive office who will pledge themselves to try and break up the land monopoly; men who are truly progressive, and who will forget the "pioneer way" of doing things, and try to find a new and more modern method.

Greater use of the "Oregon system" in law-making and law-repealing.

Instruction in the public schools along lines of modern business, and the encouragement of reading and debate among the pupils.

These are the things that Courier readers say, and the remedies they suggest. They are not the Courier's ideas, entirely. And they are printed here chiefly because they are summaries of the answers received to the inquiries of how best to kill the "Oregon jynx."

The Courier hopes that some of them will be tried; and above all else it hopes that the Oregon "jynx" will be killed, and that this state's development will increase until Oregon excels Washington in advancement.

COUNCIL AT OLD GAME

Executive Session Pulled at Special Meeting to Consider Bonds

In spite of the modesty of Christian Schuebel, city attorney, the council Tuesday afternoon requested Livy Stipp, Mr. Schuebel's law partner, to prepare an expert opinion on the legality of Oregon City's $275,000 issue of refunding bonds. The meeting, called hastily by Mayor Hackett, was attended by Councilmen Roake, Metzner, Cox, Templeton and VanAuken.

"This meeting has been called," said Mr. Hackett, "to ascertain if the finance committee has everything in readiness for the sale of the bonds at Wednesday's meeting. We want everything complete, and so I have called the boys together to see if there is anything yet to be done."

It appeared that there was something yet to be done, for Mr. Roake, for the finance committee, said that while he had been given to understand that two of the banks that are to purchase the bonds wanted a legal opinion on the securities.

"I have spoken to Mr. J. L. Hedges about this," added Mr. Roake, "and he says he will give us an opinion for $60 and have it ready tomorrow night."

Mayor Hackett suggested that Livy Stipp would be a good man, and Mr. VanAuken intimated that Mr. Stipp would prepare the opinion for $50. It was then explained that the First National Bank of Oregon City and the Lumbermen's bank, of Portland, had prospective buyers of the bonds in view, and that these buyers wanted the assurance of a legal opinion on the bonds.

Mr. Schuebel said that it was immaterial to him whether Mr. Hedges, Mr. Stipp or somebody else wrote the opinion; but added that as Mr. Stipp had "done all the work on the bonds" it would be a good deal like getting a man to pass judgment on his own work. He thought Mr. Hedges would be a good source for the desired opinion, he said. Then waxing eloquent, Mr. Schuebel confused Mr. Stipp with himself, and finally said that he didn't care to give an opinion on the bonds, or to have one come out of his office.

Councilman Templeton moved that Mr. Stipp be given the job, but the mayor wouldn't entertain the motion, saying the matter was in the hands of the finance committee, and that the committee could not be instructed as to the legal counsel it would employ. Thereupon, to save open discussion of the matter, the council went into executive session—and picked Mr. Stipp. When the council came out of executive session no reference to this action was made. Mr. Templeton moved adjournment and the session vanished. It is reported on good authority that Mr. Stipp was selected because his "bid" for the job was ten dollars less than Mr. Hedges'.

FLIRTING IS BARRED

Smirking at Girls and Attempts at "Mashing" Will Cause Arrests

Decency is to be more in evidence than formerly on the streets of the county seat henceforth, says Chief of Police Blanchard, who has given his patrolmen orders to arrest any boys or men who attempt to scrape acquaintance with girls or women on the public highways. The chief opines that many young women have been insulted by loafers who hang about street corners, and has decided that it is time for such conduct to stop.

"Making eyes," passing remarks, winking, or otherwise attempting to attract the attention of passing beauties is strictly taboo; and all youths should take warning accordingly. The legal bars are also up against friendly advances on the part of older men; and any citizen who admires a passing damoiselle in a "fatherly" way may get into trouble. If the chief has his way, in the future men will have to walk a straight line in the county seat, keep their eyes ahead of them, and not appear to notice members of the opposite sex, unless the ladies recognize them first.

JOYRIDERS VISIT CITY

County Seat Gets Glimpse of Sort of Life Supposed Now to be Rare

Wednesday afternoon five perfectly happy "souses"—two men and three young girls—rolled up Main street in a touring car, paused in the business section of Oregon City long enough to permit one of the party to enter a candy store and purchase two-bits worth of chocolates, and then rolled on their merry way to the south. The keen eyes of Chief of Police Blanchard were elsewhere at the time, and so were the eyes of Constable Frost and various and sundry deputy sheriffs.

Joyriders in broad daylight are not customary in this neck of the woods since January 1; but Wednesday's bunch didn't seem to care for the shine. The three young women, but little over high school age, were snugly covered under blankets, while the men brazenly leered at passersby. The party came in from the direction of Milwaukie, and departed towards Canby.

Chief Blanchard, told of the visitation some time afterward, didn't seem worried. "That's too bad, isn't it," was all he said.

Tell it to the printer at the Courier job department—he does the rest.

SILICA DEPOSIT PLEASES BUYERS

INVESTIGATION OF TERRILL FIND SHOWS HIGH GRADE OF MATERIAL ON HAND

DEVELOPMENT WORK STARTED

Tunnel Driven into Great Mass Shows Both Blue and White Varieties of Valuable Trade Mineral

When Charles F. Terrill dug into a silica deposit under his house just beyond the city limits of the county seat, he not only struck something very good, but he unearthed a deposit of silica that ranks up to what is known in the trade as "Bridgeport standard." Bridgeport standard silica is the highest grade of the raw material, and is in increasing demand in a score of manufacturing lines. This means that the silica that will be shipped from Oregon City is as good as any silica in the world, and that top market prices will always be paid for it.

This interesting condition of affairs developed last week, when a tunnel was driven over 30 feet into one of the main masses of the deposit on the Terrill property, and an exploratory shaft was started downward to ascertain the depth of the material. The deeper in the tunnel was driven the better was the grade of silica; and last Saturday H. M. Fancher, of Portland, one of Mr. Terrill's associates in the development of the property, took away to his office with him samples of top-grade silica, the equal of any found anywhere. Added to the high grade of this deposit is the fact that it is close to the cheapest transportation facilities, making it possible to market it at minimum expense.

Mr. Fancher is one of the owners of the huge silica deposits in Eastern Oregon, near Terrebonne; but this other deposit is some six miles from the Deschutes railroad, and when loaded on cars requires a long and expensive rail haul. By even the more expensive medium of auto truck silica from the Terrill deposit can be delivered in Portland for about five dollars a ton less than that from Eastern Oregon; so the Terrill property will be developed first. However, by using barges on the river to transport the material to Portland markets, it is expected that a still greater saving in expenses can be effected.

Construction of a refining mill at the Terrill place will be started before the end of the month, and will give employment at the start to about a score of Oregon City people. Plans are also being drawn now for the construction of roadways over which the mined silica will be hauled to Oregon City. All the work about the plant will be turned over to local people, according to Mr. Terrill and Mr. Fancher, both of whom believe in patronizing the "home community" to the fullest extent possible. As the product of the enterprise will also be marketed in Portland, the entire undertaking will be strictly an Oregon business.

Blue and white silica has been found in virtually a pure state in the tunnel already cut into the deposit. It has also developed that the silica mass has an "overburden" or earth covering of but two feet in depth, while at some places it crops out under the grass roots. This will be a great saving in development; as at the Eastern Oregon deposits the overburden is from six to ten feet in depth. In ease with which the local silica can be reached, and its accessibility to transportation will greatly facilitate the development of the project.

Tentative orders for many tons of the product have already been accepted by the development company, so when the business is put under way it will be a "live one" from the start. Mr. Fancher, an expert chemist and a famed silica man, is much pleased with the Terrill find, and believes that it will help greatly in developing allied industries in the state.

"Not only has silica so many uses itself," he said, in talking of the deposit, "but it enters largely into many compounds in daily commercial use. With potash and soda it is used in almost limitless ways; and as we have both potash and soda deposits in the state, it only needs the development of these other properties to bring a new era of industry to the state. We already have received inquiries and orders from several Oregon concerns for our product, and I expect that we will be able, shortly, to market our entire product within the state."

Carus Honor Role

Pupils who were neither tardy nor absent during the month of March at Carus school, and whose names are therefor on the honor roll, are: Kenneth Knighton, Melvin Stewart, Richard Guillemin, Merle Schmidt, John Bliss, Earl Davis, Emerson Edwards, Wayne Stewart, Minnie Edwards, Lake Smith, Albert Fisher, Ray Fisher, John Lehman and Lena Fisher.
