ARMY EDUCATION

A most unusual educational opportunity for our soldiers in France is being provided by the French government through Andre Tardieu, High Commissioner of Franco-American Affairs. Due to the length of time it will take to transport our troops home again, and also to the fact that many thousands of our soldiers will remain in Europe for a considerable period, the French government is opening the schools of France to these men.

The college men in our army who remain in France will be given free access to the French universities where they may continue their studies in art, science, law, etc. The agricultural and technical schools of France, with their complete libraries and splendidly equipped laboratories will also be open to them. It is proposed to establish at each school attended by our soldiers at least one American professor who will lecture to them in English on topics in which he has specialized. It is also proposed by the French government that all of our troops be given an opportunity to learn the French language and for this purpose French teachers are to be placed at the disposal of our forces, and will visit the various camps and lecture in French and English on questions of interest.

This training will be of especial benefit to our boys because it will throw them into intimate contact with the French people, and give them an opportunity to study French literature, methods and ideals. It will also cement even more closely the cordial relations between the two countries.

INTERNATIONAL AGRICULTURE

As one of the many important results of the war a movement is on foot for the promotion of agricultural cooperation between the United States, France, Italy, Belgium and England, a recent Washington dispatch indicating that plans are being made for an international congress of agricultural leaders in the near future—possibly before the close of the great peace conference.

It is said that the proposition contemplates, among other things, the discussion, at the proposed congress, of the plan of having each country specialize in the particular kinds of food it can best produce, rather than to pursue the present plan under which each country aims at self-sufficiency by attempting the production of all of the different kinds of foods needed by it.

Such an arrangement may have its advantages under conditions where, as in Europe, a large number of comparatively small countries are grouped together on a single continent, however the scheme does not seem to be applicable to the United States for the reason that the varieties of soils and climatic conditions in different parts of this country are favorable for the production of almost all kinds of food. Moreover, the transportation problem involved, because of America's huge size and her distance from the other countries above named, would seem to make the proposed plan impracticable in so far as this country is concerned.

Fortunately, however, the United States is in a position to aid in the reconstruction of agriculture in the devastated regions of Europe, in a much more effective manner than the one proposed. This can and will be done not only by providing huge quantities of food to meet the immediate requirements of Europe, but also by furnishing adequate supplies of agricultural machinery, including farm tractors of the various kinds, which have been thoroughly developed in this country during the last few years.

INDEMNITIES

Premier Lloyd George is quoted as saying that Germany should pay an indemnity of $120,000,000,000 to the Allies, which amount he claims is the approximate total of their actual expenditures for the war together with damages in certain cases. This estimate is apparently based on the following war bills of the six principal allied countries involved:

Great Britain.....	$40,000,000,000
United States.....	18,000,000,000
France.....	27,000,000,000
Russia.....	20,000,000,000
Italy.....	8,000,000,000
Belgium.....	7,000,000,000

Total.....$120,000,000,000

While this sum is huge almost beyond comprehension, it apparently represents but little if any more than the actual, direct cost of the war to the nations mentioned and takes no account of the even greater indirect losses and damages to which the allied and neutral nations of the world have been subjected as a result of the recent running amuck of the Central Powers.

Moreover this war has not only required the allied nations to raise by taxation and bond issues enormous sums of money to cover the actual costs of their armies, ships, airplanes, munitions, and war equipment and work of all kinds in order to defeat the Central Powers, but—by throwing the government, industrial and social affairs of the world out of joint by causing a suspension of the productive labor of hundreds of millions of people, by destroying or impairing the economic value of the many millions of killed and wounded, by enormously increasing the price to the consumers of merchandise of all kinds, and by causing utterly incalculable damages in the way of mental pain and anguish to almost all mankind by reason of the diabolical war methods followed—Germany and her allies are unquestionably responsible not only for the direct costs incurred by the allied countries in protecting their rights in this great war, but also for these other damages aggregating several times the amount above indicated; and it is therefore believed that the total amount of the costs and damages for which the Central Powers are legally and equitably responsible is not less than $500,000,000,000.

Since this sum is probably greater than the total value of all of the real and personal property in Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey combined, its payment is impossible; and even the payment of interest on the debt (which at 4% would amount to $20,000,000,000 per annum) would constitute such a burden as to mean the virtual slavery of the people of the Central Powers for all time.

However, because the perpetrators of this greatest of all crimes, cannot fully pay the enormous bill of damages for which they are unquestionably responsible, it by no means follows that they should be permitted to escape it entirely. To allow these criminals to avoid entirely the payment of this just debt after having destroyed Belgium, Serbia and large portions of France, Rumania, and Russia, and after having done such incalculable great damages throughout practically the entire world, while their own countries have escaped almost entirely from the ravages of war, would not only be a hideous injustice to the Allies, who would thus be compelled to pay the penalties of the wrongs which the Central Powers have committed, but it would be putting a tremendous premium on outlawry and would, therefore, be an injustice even to the Central Powers. It seems obvious then that indemnities should be paid not only by Germany, the principal in this great crime, but also by her accessories, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey. Moreover, the amount to be paid by them should be the utmost farthing that it is possible to exact from each of them without consigning them to abject and perpetual slavery.

In working out the answer to this indemnity problem it is important not merely to see to it that the Central Powers liquidate as far as possible the war damages for which they are responsible, but it is of even greater importance that payment be made if possible in such manner as will render it impossible for them to perpetrate another such crime. In this connection, it may be well to consider the fact that the one thing necessary to enable a country to make war is not gold, silver nor other forms of money, but consists primarily and almost entirely in the possession, in addition to man-power, of iron, copper, and other metals. Consequently, though the Central Powers should be required to pay perpetually, on account of their debt to the Allies, huge sums in money, or even in the form of goods manufactured from wool, cotton, or other non-metallic materials, those countries might still be able, at some future time, to again make the world red with innocent blood. It would seem, then, that the best interests of the world require that the Central Powers shall, as at least a part of their indemnities, turn over to the Allied nations of the world the absolute and permanent control of the operation and output of all mines containing iron, copper, and other metals necessary for war purposes. Moreover, in view of the enormous quantities of these metals which have been accumulated by the Central Powers for, or in the form of weapons of war and war munitions of various kinds, it would also seem advisable that all such metal, in whatever form it may be found, be taken over by the Allies, together with the mines, on account of indemnities which must obviously be provided for by the treaty of peace now being negotiated.

While this plan of requiring indemnities to be paid as far as possible in the form of metals would have the advantage of effectually insuring the world against further aggressions by the Central Powers, if also commends itself because it would provide a substantial means of payment without interfering with the development of peaceable pursuits by the people of the countries involved.

A properly conceived League of Nations would no doubt do much for the peace and welfare of the world, but it would seem that the best way to destroy utterly the danger of further aggression by the Central Powers is to take away from them, by the payment of indemnities in the manner above indicated, the power to make war.

COUNTY AND CITY LOCALS

Frank Champion, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Champion, of Canemah, is spending his Christmas furlough with his parents. He is a member of the naval band, stationed at Balboa Park Naval Training Camp, San Diego, Cal.

THE DIVORCE
...MILL...

A divorce was granted in the circuit court Thursday to Minnie Fessler from Paul Fessler. She was given the custody of a minor child.

Decrees of divorce were granted in the circuit court here Monday to Ida Fulford from A. C. Fulford, and to Gertrude Ober. The latter was granted custody of the minor children of the couple.

Threats to kill have also made the life of Harriet M. Stamos, who is suing Peter N. Stamos for divorce, miserable, she claims. She married him in Butte, Mont., March 20, 1918, and he started to treat her cruelly immediately after marriage. She complains further that he has failed to provide her with money for food and clothing. She says that in the latter part of last April he drew a revolver and threatened her, and that this was only one of the several occasions when she was frightened by threats.

Two women are claiming cruel and inhuman treatment as grounds for divorce suits, filed in this city last Thursday. Mabelle A. Clark is suing William C. Clark, to whom she was married in Portland, September 11, 1918, alleging that he threatened to kill her if she didn't marry him, and she agreed to do so through fear. She claims that he has cursed her before her mother, causing her much humiliation. He is extremely jealous of her without cause, according to her statement, and she further complains that he is a flirt. At one time she says she found a letter to another woman in his pocket that told of his affection for the latter. She asks a decree and the right to resume her maiden name of Mabelle Arnett.

Rose B. Richter is asking freedom from William F. Richter, to whom she was married in Seattle, November 24, 1916, claiming cruel and inhuman treatment. She alleges that he called her vile names, cursed her, and unjustly accused her of being untrue to him. She further states that at times he became so violent that she could not live with him. She says she has been forced to earn her own living for several months, as he has done nothing to support her. She asks a decree and the right to resume her maiden name of Rose McFarland.

Joseph D. Jackson, who is suing Anna Laura Jackson for divorce, claims that she deserted him in 1913. He states that for financial reasons he had to come to Oregon at that time and she refused to come with him, and has since refused to do so. They were married in Whatcom county, Wash., in 1898. The couple has four children, two of whom have been kept by the father and two by the mother. He asks that he be given custody of the two who are now in his charge, leaving the others to the mother.

Letha May Burton claims that Bertin Alvin Burton, to whom she was married at Rogers, Arkansas, April 9, 1916, deserted her immediately after the marriage service and never returned to her. She asks freedom and the privilege of resuming her maiden name, Letha May Van Ness.

RETURN OF FARM SOLDIERS
ASKED BY KANSAS FARMERS

Kansas farmers have petitioned the war department to speed the return of her soldiers to the farms.

At a conference of farm bureau officers and county commissioners recently at Manhattan the committee on reconstruction offered the following resolution: "We respectfully request the Secretary of War and the Provost Marshal General to adopt some such plan as will return the soldiers to the homes they left at the earliest possible date. In Kansas there has been sown to wheat this fall a record acreage amounting possibly to more than 10,000,000 acres, with a crop prospect which, if realized, will require an army of workers to harvest next year. The demands of the farm for labor in the early spring for preparation and planting the spring crops is also great, and in no other way can the situation so well be met as through the demobilization of our soldiers and sailors in the manner suggested."

Winter Seeding of Clover Best The best method of getting a clover stand under Western Oregon conditions is broadcasting the seed on fall sown wheat, oats, barley, or vetch and oats grain in late February, writes B. F. Sheehan, instructor in farm crops. If the ground is dry enough, the seed is harrowed in. If not, the rains will beat in enough to make a stand. To succeed it must be sown not later than the first of March, before the spring growth begins. The seed will be tested for purity and germination at the experiment station seed testing laboratory free of charge. Farmers may thus know exactly what they are putting on their fields.
