Brief Account of My Life

By
Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey
Author of "Over the Top," "First Call," Etc.

Mr. Empey's Experiences During His Seventeen Months in the First Line Trenches of the British Army in France

I found that my duties were to peel spuds, wash pots and pans and be a regular "fetch and carry" for the cook. My office hours were from six bells in the morning (three o'clock) until four bells at night (ten o'clock). I was greasy and filthy at all times, having nothing but salt water to wash in, and this would not cut the grease. Bill had it much easier than I. I had murder in my heart and vowed to "jump ship" at the first port we put into.

After nine or ten days we came alongside at Castles, St. Lucia, British West Indies, to coal ship. At this port the men believed in woman suffrage. Long lines of half-naked black women, with huge baskets of coal on their heads, passed up the forward gang plank, dumped their load of coal into the open bunkers, and left the ship by the after gangway. Before leaving the ship the fourth engineer gave each one a little brass check, which later on she would turn in to the coaling company for an English penny. While the women were working the men would sit around the dock smoking cigarettes.

The natives at St. Lucia had a great appetite for salt pork. I soon got wise to this fact and traded about a half a barrel of pork for limes, guava jelly, bay rum and alligator pears. If the steward or cook had caught me I would never be writing this story. The women threw the pork into their dirty coal baskets, and upon reaching the dock gave it to their husbands or sweethearts, who would immediately, without washing it, devour it. They spoke in a jibbering patois, which I could not understand. Some of them could speak pretty good English. The kids, averaging from seven to fifteen years, were running around naked, or diving off the dock for pennies which we threw overboard.

About two hours before sailing from St. Lucia, a little fellow about fifteen years of age came to the entrance of the galley and in fair English told Bill and me a pathetic story of inhuman treatment which would have melted hearts of stone. He wanted us to stow him away on the ship. I was agreeable, but Bill warned me that this was a very grave offense against the English board of trade laws, the maximum penalty being fourteen years' imprisonment. I did not wish to incur this risk, therefore would not listen to the entreaties of the young negro, explaining to him the penalty of the board of trade laws. Upon hearing this, a cunning look, which at the time did not appear significant to me, came into his eyes, and he told me that if I would stow him away, "see how easy it will be for you." He would do all of my work, and all I would have to do would be to sit on the superstructure and let my feet hang. I thought this was worth risking fourteen years for, so fell in with the plan, Bill objecting.

The ventilators had been unshipped while the coaling was going on, and were lying aft on the poop deck. Watching our chance, we sneaked aft and hid the little fellow in one of the ventilators, warning him, upon pain of death, not to make a sound until the ship was well under way. To say that I was nervous is putting it mildly.

We cleared St. Lucia and were soon at sea. The islands of Martinique, St. Lucia and Barbados were tiny gray dots on the horizon when an Italian sailor, Louis Maranto, went aft to ship the ventilators. In a few minutes he came rushing forward with terror in his eyes. As he passed the galley I stopped him and asked what was the matter. All he could gasp out was "Mary of God, a devil sees on da ship." "One-eyed Gibson," seeing his terror, went aft with him and soon we could see him coming forward, leading our little stowaway by the ear. The little negro was howling like a madman, and the curses of the mate snapped like a wireless message. Luckily for me the mate stopped at the galley and said, "Keep your eye on this black skunk until I can take him before the 'old man.'" For five minutes I put all my power of entreaty into my voice and prayed the stowaway to stick by me; to swear that he came aboard of his own volition. He promised to do so. Then the mate came after him and took him before the captain. During this fifteen minutes of interview I lived in an agony of torment and suspense. The little fellow came back with a smile on his face and I knew things were all right. He told me that the captain had shipped him at a shilling a month for the passage. For two days he was detailed to help me in the galley, and I lived the life of a prince. We nicknamed him "Monday," the day that he came on board. His real name was Charles Tasma Benn.

On the fourth day, Monday, after peeling a bucket of spuds, while I was reading and smoking, threw down his knife and, with a cunning leer, in a commanding tone told me to get busy and complete the task; that he wished to rest. I started in to "bull-dog" him, but he simply held his hand in my direction, fingers extended, and in a majestic voice informed me: "From now on, work for the American I will not. I tell Meester Captain American Monday stowed away. Meester American to preeson go fourteen years British government." I nearly fainted. From that time Bill and I were Monday's abject slaves. We even waited on him personally. Any desire in his possession that Monday stowed away the secret out of Monday, and I was also his slave. Bill and I spent a life of hell on board.

After getting into the tropics lime juice was issued daily to the crew to keep away scurvy. The food was horrible. The pork was rotten; in fact, on the head of one of the salt pork casks was stamped "Inspected 1883." The crew were on the verge of mutiny.

Then we reached the eastern entrance of the Straits and it was blustery and cold. The captain attempted to negotiate the Straits one bright moonlight night. After about three hours the moon disappeared and we went on the rocks, knocking a big hole in the side of the ship, and only quick and efficient work by the carpenter and crew saved us from sinking. They dropped a huge sail over the side, covering the hole. The boats were put over the side and we expected the ship every minute to founder. Next day we were towed into Punta Arenas, and after two weeks the ship was again made seaworthy.

At Talcahuana we shipped 28 Spaniards, or "bombres," as we called them, to work the cargo. This doubled my work, and I prayed that I would die. It was nothing but misery to me. I must have peeled eleven million barrels of spuds; in fact, I never turned in before six bells at night, and had to turn out at six bells in the morning.

After touching at 13 ports on the west coast, discharging our cargo, we left for a little island called Lobos, where we were to take on a cargo of guano. While working this cargo it was misery for everyone on board; the strong ammonia from the guano made our eyes red and watery, and we could only breathe by wrapping big handkerchiefs around our noses and mouths. The wind was constantly blowing, and guano was even in our food.

Then, coming back, we touched at Valparaiso, Chile. To me death seemed easier than the homeward-bound voyage, so one night Bill and I slid down the anchor chain and swam to a "bum-boat" lying near us. We gave the Chileño $4 to row us ashore. He did so. Dripping wet we crawled up onto the stone quay and made tracks for the town. We found that the dock was enclosed by a tall iron fence. At the gate were two customs officers, who immediately put us under arrest. Bill and I had $20 in gold between us, and as is usual in South America, it was a simple matter to bribe the customs officials to let us through. This cost us half of our fortune, but we did not care. Freedom was worth all of it. We were well into the town and feeling secure when we were held up by a Chilean gendarme, who looked like a walking arsenal. This cost us $2 more for our freedom. He left us in a hurry and went around the block. We had walked about five minutes when, bang! another gendarme. This cost us $4. After leaving him we were more cautious, hiding our remaining money in my shoe. Again we were arrested. We said we had no money and were haled into the presence of the "commandante of police." He had one hundred and seventy-eight medals on his chest and four thousand yards of gold braid on his collar and cuffs. He had us searched, but did not find the money. Very much disappointed, in broken English he informed us that our ship was to sail at four o'clock the next morning, and that if he found us in Valparaiso we would be sent to the mines.

Shivering and trembling we wended our way back to the dock and hunted around for a boatman. Bribing him with our remaining money he at last brought us alongside, just before the gangplank was lifted. The black smoke was pouring from the single funnel of the Cushman. Then we went before the captain, and he "logged" us ten pounds ($50) each.

On our homeward-bound passage we went around the Horn and ran into a gale. The boat's muffled, old "One-eyed Gibson" came behind him and laid him low with a marlin spike. Then, carrying him ashore, he chained him to the iron steps leading to the bridge. He remained this way for a day and a half, exposed to cold and icy wind. Strict orders were passed through the ship that no one was to approach him. That night, under cover of darkness, Bill and I sneaked him a steaming pot of stew, and some hot coffee. If he had lived, we would, through this one action, have gained a true friend for life. From exposure he contracted pneumonia and died. He was buried at sea. The carpenter sewed him in a sack, and tying an old iron wheel to his feet, placed him on a plank, and while the captain read a rough burial service the plank was tilted, and the body of the boy went down to rest in Davy Jones' locker.

The first port we touched at, the consul's flag was hoisted at the foremast, and a bleary-eyed, half-drunken little old man came on board and was closeted with the captain for about an hour. When he came out he was staggering, and his eyes, if possible, were more bleary. The captain lined the crew up, and the consul, in a thick and stuttering voice, asked the crew if the boy had died from natural causes. Ninety per cent of the men could not understand what he said, and a silence prevailed. At sea silence means consent. I butted in and said "No." I was standing next to the mate. I felt that gorilla-like hand of his pinching the back of my neck, and I nearly fainted. Then the consul went over the side into his boat, and was soon pulling for the shore. We lifted anchor and the port was left behind.

Half way up the coast we ran out of fresh water, and had to drink condensed water from an old squeaky condensing engine. It was brackish and sickening. I would have sold my soul for one drink of clear, cold water. Monday became tyrannical and unbearable, and it was up to Bill and me to devise some scheme to keep him in check.

Through listening to Monday's stories, I knew that he was very superstitious and believed in magic, or "zold," as he called it. Bill told him that my father in America was a great medicine man and that I was gifted with magic.

While loading guano at Lobos, the fourth engineer had gone on a shooting trip and killed several huge pelicans. He skinned these and gave me one of the skins. Bill and I worked a scheme. That morning a little black bird fell on the deck, and I picked it up and took it to my glory hole. It was in a dying condition. I told Bill that that night, about ten o'clock, I would go aft on the poop deck with the pelican's skin down my back, and, with my face smeared with black, would do a mystic dance. He was to take Monday and hide behind the ventilator, and while I was doing my war dance, he would explain to Monday that I was in communication with my father, the great American medicine man. He did this and it made quite a hit. The next morning Monday came to me, and, bowing low, requested a token, as he called it; a message from my father. I promised to give him one, but we were sure up against it. Then I thought of the little black bird in my glory hole, and the solution was at hand. I very solemnly informed Monday that at eight o'clock that night my father would send a message to me in the form of a little land bird.

All day Monday kept away from me, adoration and awe in his eyes. Bill and I immediately repaired to the glory hole, and certainly took tender care of that bird, praying that it would live until eight o'clock. About ten minutes to eight I put on my feathers and sneaked aft with the little bird, placed it on the steering gear, and commenced my mystic dance. I chanted a little song: "Oh, father, greatest of medicine men, a token is desired for the esteemed friend of your son. Oh, father, send me this token." Then, with a few mystic grunts, I beseeched Bill and Monday to come and receive the token. Monday came trembling aft and I pointed to the little black bird which was weakly gasping its last, but it saved the day for us. How we honored and respected that little bunch of black feathers. Curious to see what Monday would do, we left him. He sat by the bird for over an hour, chanting in that weird, sing-song patois of the British West Indies. From that time on Monday was our slave.

Two days before reaching St. Lucia, the captain sent for us, and said that he knew that Bill and I had stowed away Monday. We, like a couple of fish, fell for this and admitted it, whereupon the captain coolly informed us that we had forfeited all pay and allowances due us for the entire voyage. The joke of it was that under the board of trade laws, the Cushman had to go two hundred miles out of her way to get to St. Lucia and put Monday ashore.

We dressed him in a long pair of white pants; the carpenter gave him a red vest; Bill placed a derby hat on his head and he went ashore in a small boat. When the boat returned we lifted anchor, and as St. Lucia again faded into the distance we could see a solitary little figure on the dock waving his white pants around his head. He had removed them upon reaching port. We felt a pang of regret as he faded out of sight.

After an uneventful trip we went into quarantine in New York harbor. At the first sight of the statue of liberty a rush of independence and patriotism surged through me, and I sat down on the hatchway and absolutely refused to work. The captain threatened to put me in double irons. I told him to go to hell, and do it; that I was a free American in a free American port, and I claimed the protection of the Stars and Stripes, and in accordance with my rights as a sailor, I demanded the consul's flag to be hoisted at the foremast. The captain gave me a hard look but wilted.

The next afternoon at eight bells I landed in New York, free again. I was dressed in a pair of blue overalls barefooted, a Panama hat on my head, black as a negro from sunburn, a red handkerchief around my neck, and wearing a white negligee shirt. On my left shoulder I had a small monkey, and in my right hand a woodchuck cage with a parrot in it. In my pocket was $8.40 in silver, but I did not care. I was again on terra firma with the Stars and Stripes floating above me.

I received a wonderful welcome at home, and was of the opinion that the hardships of my cruise were well worth enduring. In view of the reception I was receiving.

But of course all wonders die out in nine days, and mine sizzled out like a wet firecracker on the Fourth of July, and it was up to me to get busy and find something to do.

Thus ended my first real adventure.

Catarhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever.
