

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Here's a date to get fixed in your mind—the progressive supper at the Presbyterian church February 14. It will be too good to miss.

At the Congregational church next Sunday the pastor will speak in the morning on "A New Horizon or a World of Brothers;" in the evening on "A Present God."

The Willamette Club gave another delightful dancing party Wednesday evening in the Busch hall. Excellent music was furnished by the Philharmonic orchestra. About one-hundred couples were present.

Dr. J. A. Van Brakle, an osteopathic physician of Southern Oregon, is located in Oregon City today. It was largely through the efforts of M. J. Lazelle of the Commercial Club that the doctor decided to come here. Until the rest of his family arrives, Dr. Van Brakle will stop at Mrs. Lena Chazman's.

WHERE LAWS CONFLICT.

Lord's Oregon Law and the Lord's Own Law.

Springwater, Ore. Mr. Editor: I see and read that Governor West and the Courier set themselves above law and the teachings of the scriptures in regard to capital punishment. The writer has read and taken notice that a community, state or nation that obeys the laws and the teachings of the Bible will come nearer being right and civilized than one that would put up a theory of its own. You will please turn to Genesis, ninth chapter, sixth verse: "Who sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made he man;" Proverbs 29:18: "Where there is no vision the people perish, but he that keepeth the law happy is he;" Matthew 5:17: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill."—Christ.

A. M. SHIBLEY.

The Courier editor finds there is considerable conflict between the Lord's law and Lord's Oregon law. Governor West proposes that the people of the state shall give a verdict on whether or not a man shall be hanged for murder, and Governor West has nothing else to do but to see the verdict is carried out.

With all respect for the teachings of the Bible, one can find within its covers a construction that will apply to either side of the matter of capital punishment—and one I recall is "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth."

The End of Trouble.

Death from a pistol shot, self-inflicted, was a sad ending to the life of W. F. Kefauver, Wednesday. Once the possessor of a fortune of half a million, he shot himself through the head, in his bed on Railroad avenue, Tuesday night.

Mr. Kefauver was a former resident of Germany and the owner of three large paper mills there. About a year ago he failed in business and came to his city with his son, and remained in New York for a short time. From there they went to Chicago, then to Spokane, then to Portland and here. He came here about a week ago and secured work with the Oregon Abstract Co.

The father and son were occupying the same bed. The son was asleep, when the father fired the bullet into his brain.

Doctors H. S. and Guy Mount attended the injured man, but he was beyond any help and died a few minutes after. Coroner Wilson held an inquest Wednesday, when the jury returned a verdict of suicide.

After Lower Rates.

Tonight (Friday) committees from this city, Gladstone, Canemah and Jennings Lodge will go in a body to Portland to present requests for lower passenger rates all along the line.

This is a matter that has been simmering for some time, but it refuses to cool and threatens to boil. Canemah is outspoken in its demands for the same rates Oregon City gets. Oregon City wants lower rates and the other towns down the line know there is strength in union, so all are going against the company's strongholds together, and back it hard.

Here is what the delegation will ask for:

Oregon City to Portland 15 cents, round trip 25 cents, commutation rate 10 cents. Same rates for Canemah, Greenpoint, Parkplace and Gladstone.

Between Gladstone, Parkplace and Greenpoint, 3 cent commutation rate.

Between Oregon City and Canemah, 8 cent commutation rate.

Canemah to be placed on the same traffic rate basis as Oregon City.

Between Oregon City and Greenpoint, Parkplace and Gladstone, 5 cent cash fare.

Between Oregon City and Greenpoint, Parkplace and Gladstone, 3 cent commutation rate.

Between Portland and Jennings Lodge and Medford, cash fare of 10 cents and commutation rate of 9 cents.

Elimination of Canemah Park station and establishment of Canemah Crossing station, and operation of cars at night to the Canemah terminal.

Don't You Miss It.

* There isn't much more to say of the chicken show, only to remember it is Friday and Saturday of this week—and don't miss it.

It will be more than a success. From the very start it has guaranteed success. Everybody is interested, everybody is going, and every year we will have these shows.

Friday night G. U. Chapman, secretary, and Harvey Beck, president, of Portland's Commercial Club, will be here and deliver addresses. There will be an orchestra each evening, there will be special entertainments, there will be something doing every minute.

The only thing needed is a big attendance. If the people make this a success, the poultry show is assured for an annual event. Be there.

Stops earache in two minutes; toothache or pain of burn or scald in five minutes; hoarseness, one hour; muscleache, two hours; sore throat, twelve hours.—Dr. Thomas' Eucalyptic Oil, monarch over pain.

THINGS WILL MOVE.

This County Soon to See State Road Work Started.

Governor West was in Oregon City Saturday last and his one and only purpose was good roads for Oregon.

A committee from the Commercial Club drove to New Era and met him. With the governor was George F. Rogers, chairman of the state highway commission and the biggest road booster Salem ever had, and L. R. Fields, superintendent of the Southern Pacific.

The rigs drove the party to the mountain of solid rock at Coalea, a mile this side of New Era. This quarry covers acres and acres and rises to a height of 200 feet or more. It is admirably located for a side track from the Southern Pacific and the rock has been to be found excellent road material.

From New Era south to Salem there is no rock of any consequence, and from New Era to this city there is a world of it. Governor West wants the state to take over these stone mountains. He says there is rock enough to build a road from Oregon City to Medford and have some left for the next generation; that a big rock crusher can be secured from the railroad company at a small cost, and with the use of convict labor, any county in the state can have crushed rock at a very low cost.

The governor's idea is to start a convict camp near New Era and commence work in earnest on the capital highway. He wants to build this highway as a starter for general state work, and as a demonstration of what may be done.

And what Governor West sets out to do, he pretty nearly does.

POLICE BLUE BOOK.

Only Eminent Rascals Find a Place Among Its Pages.

The "Who's Who" of America's criminals is a handsome volume, bound in limp leather, a limited edition of which is issued every year or so. Only members of "the four hundred" of the criminal world find representation in this register, and an entire page is devoted to each individual mentioned.

Officially the volume is known as the Identification Album of the National Bureau of Criminal Identification, an institution having headquarters at Washington. Data for the album, which is literally a blue book, are supplied by the police departments of over a hundred cities throughout the country, and it is to these departments that the volumes are distributed.

Each branch of criminal endeavor has a separate chapter in the book, one telling of pickpockets, another of forgers, and so on. At the top of each page are reproduced two photographs of a distinguished criminal—a profile and full face. Below come name, aliases, age, height, weight, general appearance and marks and scars. Herd-like measurements and criminal record fill out the page.

Filed in the bureau are about 75,000 identification cards dealing with criminals not sufficiently famous to deserve place in the "Who's Who." Each of these cards is similar to a page from the book. About one-tenth of the total number of cards are for women. About one-fourth are for negroes.—Green Bag.

SEA POSTOFFICES.

Handling and Sorting the Mail Matter on Ocean Liners.

Every one is aware that a large quantity of mail comes from Europe. Probably most persons assume that it is dumped off the steamers in bulk and sorted and routed in the postoffice of the receiving port. Such a system would result in hopeless congestion, and practically all of the 15,000,000 pounds of foreign mail matter received at New York on an average of recent years is ready, sorted and sacked when the steamers make port. This work is done in the sea postoffices aboard the ships and means days saved in the time of delivery of mail matter intended for inland points.

In the huge mass of mail brought into New York each year there are on an average 80,000,000 separate pieces, many thousands with inadequate addresses, yet to such a degree of efficiency has the operation of the sea postoffices been brought and so carefully is the work done that less than 500 errors are made annually. As the entire quantity of the ocean mail received in a year would fill 2,200 standard mail cars an almost incredible accuracy is indicated—less than one error of any kind whatever for every four carloads of mail.

Congress authorized the sorting of mail on board conveying steamships in 1890, but it was not until the year following that any systematic effort was made to do so. The work of the sea postoffice is very similar to that of the railway mail service. On board a large liner there will be usually two United States clerks, two in the employ of the country from which the steamer sails and several subalterns or porters. This force will on an average trip open and sort from 800 to 900 sacks of mail, probably consisting of 50,000 ordinary letters and 4,000 registered letters, besides 250,000 parcels and periodicals. Mail for New York city is distributed and separately sacked for each of the stations and that for the United States generally according to a schedule which has 123 divisions. In addition to the mail for the United States, the sea postoffice clerks must sort that destined for Cuba, Mexico, Canada and the Orient, a great deal of the last class being forwarded by rail to San Francisco and thence by steamer.

To facilitate matters two mail boats are maintained at New York, and these meet incoming steamers at the quarantine station, one taking on the mail bags intended for direct delivery to trains and steaming directly to the railway stations along the river front, the other that for New York city and such others as require rehandling. The sea postoffice cost the government something less than $3,000,000 per annum.—Harper's.

Dismal Outlook.

"Why do you look so unhappy?" "Well, you know I'm pretty well busted."

"Yes, but you always were, and yet you're home up pretty well. What is the particular trouble today?" "I just proposed to the girl I love."

"Ah! And the answer was unfavorable?" "I don't know."

"You don't know? Why, what do you mean? Surely you must know whether she accepted you or rejected you?"

"That's just it. I asked her to marry me, and she said she would. Then I asked her if she was sure she could be happy with a man who had no money, and she said she could. She said she had always preferred buying things on credit anyhow."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Story of a Profile.

On the facade of the Palazzo Vecchio, at Florence, to the right of the central entrance, the profile of a man's head is traced on the marble, the authorship of which is ascribed to Michelangelo. The story runs that he and a friend made a bet as to which of them would draw a head best with their backs to the wall, a bet easily won by Michelangelo, for he traced a perfect profile, whereas the other produced only a waverling, imperfect outline. The story further relates that the tool used was a nail. Both drawings are carefully preserved.

A Sculptor's Slip.

How many know that the only fault ever found with the splendid equestrian statue of Washington in the Boston Public garden, made by Thomas Ball, was the fact that the horse has no tongue. It is one of those minor details that were discovered long after the statue had been put up. Ball's Governor Andrew at the statehouse has all its proper members.—Boston Journal.

A Message

It Was Sent by General Washington and Stopped on the Way
By GENEVIEVE GOODMAN

Before leaving New York for New Jersey Washington's headquarters were at Dobbs Ferry. A force was at Fort Lee, on the opposite side of the Hudson from New York, but the stronghold was given up, and Washington's next permanent stopping place was at Morristown. Before leaving the river the commander in chief desired to communicate with General Lee—the same Lee who afterward proved a traitor to the colonist cause—and, sending for a young private soldier who had done some scouting for him, gave him the message, written on tissue paper and rolled into a ball the size of a small pill. Herbert Burrage, the messenger, proposed to go dressed as an ordinary farmer's boy, these precautions being necessary because he would need to pass over defensible ground, and the Tories were active in behalf of the British cause.

Burrage's route took him through Elizabethtown, now called Elizabeth and then but a small village. Unfortunately or fortunately, as the case might be, he had a sweetheart there. Her father was an ardent Tory, and Burrage felt that it would be very risky for him to stop on the way for a kiss from his girl. But when it is a question with a lover between his girl and danger danger is sure to win. Burrage on passing the Erskine farm, near the town, loitered near till he saw Molly go to the spring house. Then, dodging behind trees and fences, he went there himself.

"Why, Herbert?" she exclaimed, astonished at the sudden apparition. "What are you doing here?" "Hush! I'm carrying a message from General Washington to General Lee."

The girl paled. "When men carry messages between armies in war time not in uniform aren't they liable to be hanged if caught?" she asked, trembling.

"Well, in the first place, many of our men have no uniform and this is not exactly within the enemy's lines. I have taken a great risk in coming here to see you, for if your father knew my errand he would hold me, and if he could get a hand on the message it would go to General Howe instead of General Lee."

If Herbert Burrage had been an older soldier he would have known better than to remain in a spring house, where he could be easily cornered.

The woman in such affairs usually keeps her wits about her better than the man. Molly realized the danger and kept her eye on a little window through which she could see the farmhouse, a short distance away. But even she did not think far enough ahead, for when she saw her father coming it was too late for her lover to beat a retreat before being seen. Seeing her start-up Herbert started too, and on discovering her father he resumed his wits sufficiently to dispose of the message. He took it out of his waistcoat pocket and put it in Molly's ear. Then he waited for the blow to fall.

The door of the spring house had been closed, but Molly threw it open. When Mr. Erskine saw Herbert Burrage, whom he knew to be his daughter's lover, he greeted him not unkindly, but with surprise.

"I thought you had enlisted," he said to Herbert.

"So I did."

"Then why these citizen's clothes?" Herbert made no reply—indeed, there was nothing to say.

"It is evident," said Erskine, "that you are on some business for the army. I must take you in. Go to the house. If you make any resistance there are those within call who will shoot you down on my request."

Herbert, who, loath to injure Molly's father, having transferred his message, made no resistance. At the house he was locked in a room by himself, and presently several Tory neighbors came in and searched him. Not finding anything, they were tempted to let him go; but, being convinced that if he had no written message he at least had a verbal one, they decided to hold him.

The season was late autumn, but the snow had not yet fallen in that region. The moon was full, and Herbert from the window of his prison room could see far and wide. He knew Molly must have been searched to determine if he had not transferred his message to her, and wondered if it had been found. What was his relief and joy to see a horse issue from the barn and by the moonlight a rider on its back and that that rider was a girl, Molly. He knew her errand. She possessed the message and was going to carry it to General Lee.

The next morning Molly was discovered to be missing. Her father saw through the matter, divining that Burrage had carried a message and that it had been transferred to Molly, who had carried it to its destination. He called his Tory friends together, and they discussed the situation. It seemed that nothing was to be done but to hold the prisoner till her return. As for following her, she had doubtless too good a start.

When Molly returned and admitted that she had carried the message from Elizabethtown, to what point she would not say, after a conference among the Tories it was decided that, rather than have it known that they had been tricked, they would set Herbert Burrage at liberty.

WEST STRONG FOR WOODROW WILSON

Rank and File of the Party in That Great Section Recognize His Worth.

HAS REDEEMED HIS PLEDGES

His Actions as Chief Executive of the State of New Jersey Show His Political Ability and Integrity—Loyal to People.

BY CHARLES G. HEIFNER, Chairman of Democratic State Committee of Washington.

I know pretty accurately the sentiment of the rank and file of the democrats of the West. They are strongly in favor of Woodrow Wilson for our Presidential nominee next year. I feel sure that this statement will hold good in every state west of the Mississippi River. I recently spent some time in the east on business that brought me in touch with a number of influential business men. Incidentally I have had occasion to discuss political conditions with these men and I am glad to say that, regardless of past party affiliations, I find them strongly in favor of Governor Wilson. It is not difficult to ascertain the cause of this faith and trust and confidence on the part of farmers, wage workers and business men in the political ability and integrity of Woodrow Wilson. He kept the faith. A year ago while a candidate for Governor of New Jersey he made certain pledges and promises to the people of that state. The people took him at his word and elected him, the first democrat to be elected Governor in that state in sixteen years, and to the gratifying amazement of all honest men and to the utter consternation of the political tricksters he and his loyal supporters in the legislature proceeded to enact laws and carry out plans in exact conformity with his pledged word to the people. Among the plain people everywhere he has come to be regarded as a man whose performances square with his promises. Just such a man is imperatively needed as the chief executive of the United States. Having demonstrated his practical capacity to accomplish things in his own state, though one branch of the legislature was of opposite political faith, it is not surprising that there is such an overwhelming demand for his elevation to the White House.

All Favor Wilson.

I believe the State of Washington will send a delegation to the next Democratic National Convention favorable to Governor Wilson for our presidential candidate, and I might say further that I believe he is the only democrat who can get the electoral vote of that state, and other Western States. We democrats out there are not unmindful of the merited consideration which other great democrats are receiving at the hands of their fellow citizens throughout the country, but we believe Governor Wilson, more nearly than any other avowed candidate, typifies in his record and his personality, those qualities and characteristics which the average American is proud to see exemplified in the President of his country. Hence, his popularity in the East, the West, the North and the South. His record as a scholar, an educator, an historian and as a student and writer on social and economic subjects all combine to equip him to be just what he is today—a finished orator, a great statesman and our logical leader in solving the great industrial and financial questions which now disturb the business world, and which the republican party has proved itself incapable either to understand or to solve. Governor Wilson is progressive in that he is not wedded to the mildewed past or to precedent to such an extent as to make him timid and afraid to meet the demands of the present hour. I am for him because he stands for genuine representative government—the actual rule of the people after careful consideration of all governmental matters coming before them. He would free trade and commerce of the imposts and handicaps with which they are now burdened. He would place on the statute books a law regulating interstate commerce so clear, so concise, so just and so definite that all men and all corporations would not be left in doubt as to whether they were complying with or violating the law. He would place our industrial affairs upon a solid and legitimate foundation, freed from uncertainty and distrust.

In his record as Governor of New Jersey he has literally lived up to and exemplified in his every act the time honored tenet of democracy: "Equal rights for all, special privileges to none."

He will bring to the discharge of his duties as chief magistrate of the nation, the right scholarship of a Bancroft, a Lowell and a Hawthorne, all of whom held political office; he will have had the experience that comes from practical administration and executive responsibilities, and in every respect he will worthily rank with those other great leaders of democracy whose achievements make brighter and more glorious the pages of American history. These are some of the reasons why I am for him and why the American people are for him.
